D^R. ALBRECHT WEBER,

AS A TESTIMONY

OF THE AFFECTION AND GRATITUDE

OF HIS PUPIL
W. PERTSCH.

P R E F A C E.

About nine months ago my respected teacher, Mr. Weber, whose name I have dared to put as the best recommendation at the head of this little work, being occupied with cataloguing the Chambers collection of Sanskrit manuscripts, which forms so valuable a part of the Royal library at Berlin, found also two manuscripts of the little historical work, which is now laid before those who take an interest in the gradual development of the literature of a people, the study of whose antiquity acquires more and more importance for the investigation of our own origin and the history of mankind in general. He at first proposed to publish it himself; but being burdened with numerous other and more important labors, he invited me to undertake it. I consented, not without hesitation, doubting my competence to perform the task in a satisfactory manner, as being still but a beginner in Indian studies; and indeed, if the present edition should be found to answer in some measure to the just demands of Sanskrit philology, I am indebted for it only to the liberal assistance granted me by Mr. Weber in every part of the work, with that kindness which all his pupils are wont to find in him. The best manner, I think, in which I can express to him my thanks, is by promising, to do my best to bring no discredit upon such a teacher. To Mr. Whitney also, from Northampton, North America, my friend and fellow in studies, I feel much indebted for his kind assistance both in the correction of my English style.

and the better comprehension of several passages. I, therefore, express also to him my heartiest thanks.

The Kṣhitiçavaṃçāvalīcharitaṃ (sometimes spelled also — āvalī —), a chronicle of the ancestors of Kṛṣṇachandra, the famous Rājā of Navadvīpa or Nuddea in Bengal, who ruled during the greater part of the last century, famous for his own erudition and the protection he granted to art and knowledge, has, so far as I know, not been brought to light till now, and seems to be the only representative in Sanskrit of a class of compositions which form a considerable part of the Bengālī literature. From this circumstance together with the orthography and language, characteristic for the time of its composition, it derives its chief interest; its contents however likewise, as affording a view, and, it should seem, a tolerably undistorted one, of the relations subsisting between the native Rājās and the Mohammedan viceroys, is not without its share of interest.

The two manuscripts, after which this edition has been made, bear in the original order of the Chambers collection the numbers 574 and 844; in that introduced by Mr. Weber 567 and 568. The former, Ch. 574 (D.), is well written with Devanāgarī in European manner, that is to say, across an octavo page. On the first page of the first leaf, some person ignorant of Sanskrit, misled probably by the first word, has entitled it: pūrvārājñasya kathā Vālmīkī (sic!), the history of former rajas by Valmeek; less incorrect is the title on the enveloping leaf: rājyāvalī rājākṛṣṇachandrasya, that is, an account of the family of Rājāh Krishenchund. The second manuscript, N. 844 (B.), is written in an excellent Bengālī character, with the exception only of fol. 29^b — 31^b and 31^b l. 3 — 32^b, which are written as badly as the other are written well. The whole is written in Indian manner, each page having six lines, only f. 29^b has seven. The paper is yellowish-red, and the whole ms. lies between two wooden plates, which are painted green without and red within. On the first page of the first leaf is to be read: Navadvîpiyaçrîkṛishnachandrarâjñah kulavarṇanam, an account of the family of Râja Krishna Chandra Râja of Navadvîpa or Nuddee, in the Bengal character.

In matters affecting the sense the two mss. are congruent in a high degree, but in externalities of language there are slight differences between them, of which some account will be given below. The interpunctuation is almost entirely wanting in both mss., and has therefore been added. Only now and then a stroke is found, and then usually not where any interpunctuation is very especially called for. Once even (58, 7 after prasthiteshu) in both mss. a stroke is set in the middle of a sentence. As owing to the broken style, it would have been disagreeable for the eye and less clear to set nothing but the usual sign wherever punctuation was required; use, therefore, has been made also of the interval, so that a stroke corresponds nearly to the period in European languages, an interval to the comma or colon. That this manner of punctuating is not quite contrary to Indian custom itself, is shown by the editions of Bengâlî works published at Serampore, where the same system has been introduced. Often also the neglect of Sandhi represents the wanting interpunctuation in our manuscripts, a case of too frequent occurrence to require enumeration of single instances. In both mss. the division into parichhedas ceases with par. VI; and also the indication of the end is wanting, on account of which we are without any direct information as to its author and the time of its composition. Yet the latter is easily to be fixed, at least approximately: the narrative reaching to 1728 A. D. (the year of the accession of king Kṛishnachandra), its composition must be of a later date than this year; and from the circumstance, that neither in our Kshit. is taken any notice of the Bengâlî biography of Kṛishnachandra (an account of which we shall give below), nor in the latter of our work, although both treat to a considerable extent of the same subject, we might perhaps conclude that both were written about the same time, that is to say, as we know of the latter, about the end of the last century (see also Index I p. 67 under Vaḍasāheba). The Bengālī work then may have become more extensively circulated, partly as treating mainly of the history of a king so famous and so recent as Kṛṣṇachandra, partly as being written in Bengālī, and very well.

The form and language.

Before all we cast a look on the orthographical peculiarities of our manuscripts, which, as being not insignificant, have been to a considerable extent received into the present edition. There will be observed in this respect the frequent use of the virāma, both in the middle and the end of a word (see e. g. 3, 8. 28, 10. 33, 10. 37, 20. 21. 39, 1. 40, 18. 43, 10. — 21, 19. 39, 4. 48, 13), a manner of writing which, as applied also in D., is explainable from its being copied from a Bengālī ms., a conjecture, which is supported also by the occasional interchange of v and r (e. g. pratihāvin 2, 17. B. D. sārajñāḥ 48, 14 D.) or the omission of a virāma, e. g. 7, 1 where both mss. write samrāṭakalpam. A consonant following an r between two vowels inconsequently is either doubled or not (e. g. 22, 20, but 23, 3). Finally there is common to both mss. the false manner of writing, (which however, seems in later times to have become quite usual in India, as forms with it are received even into Wilson's dictionary), that instead of ttva always is written tva (see datvā 9, 7. 11, 13. 23, 6. 27, 18. 29, 17. 39, 4. satva 10, 1. 12, 10. 35, 7. 53, 15. tatva 11, 15. chhitvā 21, 8); only once (38, 21) we find ttva, at least intended, the reading being in B. kriyāvatdvād and in D. kriyāvatatvād (under the forth akshara of which by another hand a very small virāma has been put). Besides, D. has one more peculiarity, which likewise has been retained by us as being in agreement with the period of composition, namely the expression of all nasals preceding a consonant by anusvāra: only a few exceptions are made by m (tāmbūla 2, 15), and the guttural n, the latter chiefly in proper names, as Anga, Vanga, Ârangajeva; but also in anga 32, 2; çringa 34, 13. 18; angikâra 49, 18; mangala 50, 13. A b is never written; where it is printed, therefore, it has been substituted for a v of the mss.; likewise the apostrophes between an e euphonicly changed to a, and a following vowel have been introduced for perspicuity's sake.

The rules of Sandhi are scarcely so often correctly observed as they are either neglected or improperly applied. Comparing the two mss. in this respect, B. is more correct, as the Table of Various Readings will more particularly specify; yet, as also its correctness is not at all consequent, it bears more the appearance of longing for a learned look, and accordingly, yet without succeeding, declining from the orthography natural to its writer. We have, therefore, taken for foundation the text of D., which, although full of faults, yet makes the impression of giving the orthography usual and natural to the author of our book, and perhaps in general to those who wrote Sanskrit at that period. Nor can at least the neglect of Sandhi have its origin in the ignorance of a copyist, for even correctly to resolve those forms written with Sandhi would suppose a thorough knowledge of the language.

The following table is an attempt to give a systematical view of these anomalies.

Vowels,

when meeting at the end and the beginning of two words.

1. â concluding a word is not contracted with a following a, [the avagraha standing between,] but causes it to be dropped 9, 7. 29, 17. 34, 18. 32, 11, while 32, 13 â and a are contracted, as well as 37, 4. 41, 14. 43, 6.
2. There are left unchanged:

*6, 20. *7, 21. *13, 11. *17, 3. *20, 21. *22, 8. 28, 18. 45, 4.

Consonants.

I. When meeting at the end and the beginning of words.

1. t is left unchanged:

before u 31, 8; before g, 8, 2. 3. 8, 4; before ch, even in composition 22, 9. 27, 14. 28, 6. 48, 12; before chh, 18, 19. 28, 3. 52, 15; before j, 10, 20. 43, 5; before d, 2, 19. 27, 16. 31, 18. 19; and even in composition 23, 11, and often; before r, 45, 13; before ç 3, 8. 12. 8, 5. 6.
 10, 8. 47, 18. 49, 7; the two words tat çrutvâ are constantly written without Sandhi (6, 21. 19, 8. 30, 7 etc.), and the t and çr are even compounded into one ligature 20, 4. 21, 7. 30, 2. 7, and often. Finally t is left unchanged also when meeting with a following h, 19, 4. 26, 1.

2. s following an a is changed to Visarga:

before a, 12, 19. 27, 20; before i 12, 2; before e 12, 19;
 before ch 7, 20. 49, 7; before t 12, 1. 30, 7. 37, 9.
 50, 21. 59, 6; before n 52, 8; before m, 12, 19. 20; before y, 39, 6 (interpunctuation?); before r, 20, 15.
 It is dropped before y, 20, 16.

Following an â it is changed to Visarga instead of being dropped: before a 59, 5; before n, 53, 19; before e 12, 21 (interpunctuation?) before bh, 35, 6; before m, 12, 19. 20; 57, 5; before y, 3, 15; or it is dropped instead of being changed to Visarga: before p, 25, 8. 13.

Following an i it is changed to Visarga before d, 41, 18. — 41, 17, however, it is correctly changed to r.

3. m is changed to Anusvâra:

before â, *46, 14; before i, *12, 1; *49, 1; before u 19, 10; *53, 6; before e, 18, 15; 24, 14; 47, 12.

II. In the middle of words sh frequently does not change a following t or n to ṭ and ṇ; thus dṛishṭvâ and dṛishṭi are always written dṛishṭvâ and dṛishṭi, while drashṭum and drashṭavya are written rightly. The ligature shṇ also is frequently written as shn; immediately after r too n is sometimes put instead of ṇ, e. g. Mâdurnna instead of Mâdurṇṇa. Finally in the affixes and terminations n is frequently put for ṇ. All these faults have been corrected without remark, the former as having too barbarous an appearance, the latter as common to almost all Sanskrit manuscripts.

Those cases which have been marked with an asterisk in the preceding table, are such, where the word following the letter which is put without Sandhi is a proper name: they are perhaps accountable for by the wish of the author to let these proper names stand by themselves, and without even orthographical connexion with the preceding word; yet, as in some other quite analogous passages a combination takes place (see 12, 14. 13, 9. 46, 13. 47, 16. 48, 4. 49, 20. 50, 7), we see, that it was at least not a principle to separate for perspicuity's sake the proper names from the current of common speech. Here again, therefore, as every where inconsequence is the chief fault of our author.

Of incorrect forms but little is to be said: if occurring in one ms., they are usually corrected in the other, and but one passage (13, 8) has been noticed, where in both mss. avâtasuḥ is written instead of avâtsuḥ, probably again through the influence of the omission of virâma which is so usual in the Bengâlî character. Besides the right form is given also 50, 5. If but little of this kind occurs, so much the more frequent are hard, faulty, and sometimes almost inconceivable constructions. Of this kind are: Javanena svâdhipatyam chakâra 6, 20; Kâçînâtho baddhvâ sainyena nivedito 9, 19; paritushṭaṣ cha Javaneçvaro — âjnapto Durgâdâso 11, 16; amâtyena daurjanyam vijñâpayâmâsa 12, 16; Indraprasthapureçvaro daurjanyam adhigachhan Kachurâyenañpi gocharikṛitañ 13, 9; te cha — sâkshâtkârayâmâsa 20, 6; yatra (nânâvidhabhakshyadravyâñi) vilashanti 25, 10 (see Note 12); vikretrâ ekâ pâdukâ nîchaiḥ sthâpayitvâ anyayâ ghâtitâ, 28, 14. 15; râyeṇa sarvâḥ pâdukâḥ kṛitvâ lokebhyo viçrâṇayâmâsa 29, 15; 30, 5 is to be supplied: he said or continued; nâvikas tarir vâhitâ 33, 21; bhavân tatsamnidhiṃ gatvâ âlâpâdinâsamvarddhanîyaḥ, 35, 18, instead of bhavatâ — gatavatâ; padâtidhanvinâṃ sahasraço 49, 15; Râmakrishṇena cha mahatâ sainyena parivṛito âkrâmya — mahad bhayam upâditam, 50, 16; baddhena cha tena — mahîṃ çaçâsa, 58, 21.

The unwieldiness sufficiently proved already by these passages, appears yet in another circumstance, in the often almost ridiculously circumstantial circumscriptions of comparatively simple notions. Of this kind is c. g. 38, 11: nâsikâdiparishkârârthavasanâñchalam, an end of cloth for adorning the nose and the like i. e. a pocket-handkerchief; or 46, 11: etaddeçîyayathârthalikhanakarmaniyuktas tadamâtyaḥ, a minister of his who was employed in the office of writing whatever was necessary i. e. his resident; the same notion is 8, 7 expressed by: taddeçâvasthitayathârthavṛittântalikhanârthananiyuktâmâtya, an officer, who living in that country was employed for giving true reports of any event; 28, 12: vikretrupanyastamûlyakretrupanyastamûlyanyûnâdhikyavivechanâyâm, verbally: in the disputation on too little or too much in the price offered by the seller, and in the price offered by the buyer, i. e. in the higgling between the merchant and the purchaser; 42, 18: prativarshaniyamitarâjasampradâ-nakaradânâpûrvakarâjâdhînamâṭiyâriprabhṛitika-tichidgrâmâdhikâritvaṃ, the government over Mâṭiyâri and some other villages, which were subject to the king under the condition of paying tribute to him as a present for him, which was to be discharged every year. Some similar, but yet more complicated compounds will be explained in the two last notes upon the translation. Alike heavy are many of the frequent compositions with âdi, which word our author employed wherever it could be; entirely pleonastically iva is employed 54, 2, kâlakalpa iva, for iva there seems to express precisely the same sense which had been expressed already by kalpa, „like similar to death“, or „similar, as it were, to death.“ See also 13, 10.

Finally, respecting sundry peculiarities in the usage of language, we call attention to a peculiar manner of denoting higher numbers which are compounded with hundred and thousand, the numbers hundred and thousand being expressed by abstracts in î: see çati 2, 10. 37, 9. 55, 18. 59, 7; sahasrî, 24, 9. 29, 15, and once, 42, 20, sâhasrî, with Vṛiddhi in the first syllable; yet also the usual forms in a occur, at least sahasra, 12, 18. 19. 24, 12. 49, 4. On the use of kartrika (16, 21), pûrvaka (3, 11. 42, 19. 44, 17. 48, 9. 49, 1. 50, 1. 52, 6), and what equals the latter, purahsaram (11, 12. 52, 6. 53, 2), see Haughton, Rudiments of Bengâlî Grammar. §. 141. Farther, is to be noticed a periphrastical manner of expressing the future participle, with a notion of certainty, by the perfect participle with a suffixed kalpa; see 9, 6: mama paçcâd âyâtakalpo bhrityaḥ, a servant of mine, who (certainly) will come after me; properly: who is like one having come already. The adjective prâya, similar, suffixed to a noun means: being about to perform the action which the root of the noun expresses, or: having almost done so; thus e. g. 53, 13: vayaṃ prâptaprâyâḥ, we are about being reached, or: we are almost reached; see also 53, 4. 34, 3. Finally a syntactical peculiarity appears 37, 5: tat kim evam āha? where the third person is put in addressing another, bhavān being to be supplied.

Content.

A part of the history which forms the content of our work, viz. the period from the expulsion of king Kācīnātha out of his realm to the accession of Kṛṣṇachandra, being treated also in the above mentioned Bengālī biography of the latter king, we proceed now to give, for comparison's sake, an abstract from this part of that pretty composition. If any passages in it shall be found to have been misunderstood, I may lay claim to excuse on the score of having had no instruction in Bengālī, and being without an authority to whom to refer in doubtful and difficult points. The edition used is that of London, 1811, the correctness of which leaves much to desire. The numbers set at the margin give, for ease in reference, the pages of this edition.

3. „Kācīnātha, a zemīndār residing in the village (grāma) Kāṅkadi in the Bengal province Hābili *) fell into a quarrel with the subahdār of Dakka, on account of the tribute required of him. Kācīnātha was defeated and fled into the province of Vāguyāna ) to Viçvanātha Samādvāra accompanied by his wife who was with child. They were hospitably received; but Kācīnātha, seeing that Viçvanātha treated his wife as if she was his own daughter, soon repaired secretly to Hastināpura, tired of the inactive life he led with Samādvāra. After the departure of Kācīnātha, his helpless wife was adopted by Samādvāra, and the child too which she soon brought forth, was treated by him as his grandson. 5.

This child obtained the name of Çrîrâma, and was usually surnamed Râma Samâdvâra. When the time had arrived, at which the young prince ought to be invested with the brah-manical cord, and his father had not yet returned, the ceremony was after his twelveth year, according to the advice of the most celebrated Pandits, performed by Samâdvâra, and a wife given to him. He had a son, whom he named Bhavânanda; and afterward two more Harivallabha and Subuddhi."

„Bhavânanda was of equally excellent spirit and body;
he studied the Vedas, the Çâstras, learned the Bengâlî, Per- 6.
sian and Arabic languages, was clever in the use of weapons, a second Nala in the art of driving horses, a second Vrihaspati in all sciences. Later he was, as well as his brothers, married. Then he travelled to Dakka, where he received an appointment from the governor of Bengal, and obtained the title of Râya Majumadâra, so that now his whole name was Bhavânanda Râya Majumadâra. After a time Pratâpâditya, 7.
king of Jessore (Yaçahara), a man of high distinction, refused to pay his tribute, „an affair, the further particulars of which are to be found in the biography of this king.“*) The war against Pratâpâditya was committed to Râja Mânasiṃha, who required for his companion Bhavânanda R. M., as being a native of Gaur, and well acquainted with the localities of that country. The governor consented to this demand, although he was sorry to lose so skilful an officer as Bhavânanda. Mânasiṃha then departed with an army of 900,000 (!) 8.
soldiers, and passed on his march, two months after his departure, the grâma Bâluchara in Gaur on the Ganges, a beautiful place, where he stayed for some time; then, after one day's march, he arrived at Varddhamâna (Burdwan), where 9.
at this time Dhîrasimha, the son of Vîrasimha, was king, by

- whom he was hospitably received, and invited to visit his capital. Having exchanged presents with him, he accepted the invitation. On the way to Dhīrasinpha's capital, Mānasinpha, happening to notice a mine, asked Bhavānanda, who, by making known to him the names and relations of all the places they had passed, had already given many proofs of his familiarity with the country, what this was. Whereupon he received the following information: Vidyā, the learned daughter of Vīrasinpha, had made a vow, to give her hand to whoever should excel her in scientific attainments. Many princes attempted it, but no one succeeded, until a certain very handsome and learned prince, called Sundara, son of Mahārāja Guṇasindhu of Kāñchipura in the Dekhan, came up on rumor of it to the house of a florister, called Hirā, dug this mine, through which he gained access to the princess, overcame her, and entered with her into the Gandharva marriage. „The whole story is particularly related in the Chorapañchāṅga, from which also Bhavānanda recited it to Mānasinpha.“*)
- „On his march from Burdwan to Jessore, Mānasinpha visited also the native city of Bhavānanda, Vāguyāna, where he was overtaken by violently rainy weather. Bhavānanda instantly caused all provisions from the whole district to be brought together, and with them entertained the whole army
12. of Mānasinpha for seven days, a service for which Mānasinpha promised him a fit reward after the subjection of Pratāpāditya. The army then proceeded, and soon overcame Pratāpāditya, and after some repose returned to Dakka. Bhavānanda R. M. too returned thither, and requested as a boon the government (zemindārship) over Vāguyāna.“

Now a most miraculous event is related, how the goddess

*) This notice is surprising, as in both the recensions of this poem which are known, no word is mentioned of such a story as the one referred to here. We, therefore, must either suspect a mistake on the part of our author, or we must suppose another poem with the same title. To assume a third recension of the same poem would be the most improbable, as the difference would be too strong affecting the whole thread of the narrative.

Lakshmî came in person from the house of Harihoḍa in the grâma of Vaḍagâchhi (Belenchy? about 89. 47. E. Lat. 24. 20. N. Long.) to settle in that of Bhavânanda R. M.; how, by the way, she blessed and rewarded a poor ferrywoman, who was a zealous devotee of hers; how she appeared to the wife of Bhavânanda in a dream, and said to her, that she had chosen this house for her dwelling, and had placed a small basket in the chamber of the queen, and that the latter must be faithful to her service and not open the basket; how all happened as predicted; and how even in the time when this was written, the basket was still to be seen at Vâguyâna. The whole is related with great copiousness, but seems too irrelevant to be extracted here with all the particulars. 13-15.

„Having returned to Dakka, Bhavânanda paid his respects to Pâdishâh Jehângîr Shâh, who had desired to see the man, whose merits Mânasimha had so highly praised to him. The Pâdishâh overwhelmed Mânasimha with favors, and finally invited him to request any boon of him, promising to grant it without reserve. Mânasimha answered, that Bhavânanda had been the cause of the victory, and that he, therefore, asked in the latter's behalf the government over Vâguyâna in Bengal. The Pâdishâh at once caused the document conferring the grant to be made out, and ratified it. Bhavânanda then paid his respects, took leave also of Mânasimha, and went home in a ship. 16.

„Bhavânanda ruled over his subjects as a mild and beloved prince, and was a devotee of Lakshmî, the whole story of whom his wife had related to him. After a time he had three sons, who in the succession of their age were: Gopâla, Govinda, and Çrikrishṇa (but see Kshit. 18, 17. 21, 20). Of these Gopâla was preeminent for his knowledge. After a time Bhavânanda gave wives to his sons, and Gopâla had a son, whom he called Râghava. In a great assembly, which Bhavânanda had convoked to celebrate a feast in his grandson's honor, he granted to his two brothers Harivallabha and Subuddhi a government; soon after which he died. 17. 18.

„Gopâlarâya succeeded him and reigned for some time. He gave a government to his brothers Govinda and Çrîkrishṇa, worshipped Īçvara, and died.“

19. „Râghava succeeded him, a very distinguished ruler. He journeyed to the capital, where he obtained from the emperor (samrât), who was well pleased with him, the sway over several countries, and the title of Mahârâja, which all his successors inherit. He had a son, Rudrarâya, to whom, after a time, he transmitted the realm, while he himself gave up his whole mind to Īçvara.“

„Rudrarâya Mahârâja having built a palace in the province of Mâtṣyârî, lived there; and this palace was yet extant when this history was written. He had three sons: Râmachandra, Râmakrishṇa, and Râmajîvana.“

„Râmachandra was very vigorous. Having been anointed as king, he subdued the countries of several smaller zemindârs, and so enlarged his own realm.“

20. „After his death Râmakrishṇa became king, the contemporary of whom as subahdâr of Dakka was Murshed Âli Khân, who colonized Murshedabad, and transferred his residence to this city (but see Index I under Jâpharakhân, and Index II under Murasidabâda). Being on good terms with the subahdâr, Râmakrishṇa cared little for the stipulated tribute, kept a great army, and extended his realm. He ruled over 2,200,000 subjects.“

21. 22. „After his death Râmajîvana succeeded to the throne. He took up his residence at Krishṇanagara, which had been founded by his brother. Having ruled for some time with much splendor, he had two sons: Raghurâma and Râmagopâla, the former of whom after some time succeeded him. He had for a long time no son, until one night, which he spent with his wife, the latter saw in a dream a handsome youth who said to her, that he was her future son, being properly a servant of Īçvara whom she worshipped, who had been ordered to become her son. Then having become very small, he slid into her mouth. Upon this in fact the queen conceived a son, on whose birth the king and the whole country were filled with the utmost joy. The astrologers declared, that the child 23. was to live long and happily, to become very learned, just, famous, and a great king. Growing day by day, like the moon, the young prince obtained the name of Kṛishnachandra (the Kṛishṇa-moon). Soon he was instructed in Sanskrit, Bengālī, Persian literature, in the use of arms and the art of governing, and in all he distinguished himself. His father Raghurāma then resolved to marry him, and charged his counsellors, to find for him a wife worthy of him in nobility and beauty. They succeeded in doing so, and the nuptials were celebrated in the month Phālgun (February-March; the year is not mentioned). There were invited the kings and nobles of Rāḍhā, Gaur, and Bengal etc.“ There follows now a most circumstantial description of the whole feast, of which we shall give only some few traits, as finding their parallels in the Kshit., either in the description of Kṛishnachandra's annaprāṣana or in some other. For the entertainment of the guests various magazins were established, and within them four kinds of provision, viz. food to be chewed, sucked, licked, and drunk (see Kshit. 41, 4). He ordered to the servants to take care of the rich supply of his guests, received the kings himself, 24. and assigned to them lodgings and servants to wait upon them, and sent to them of his provisions, while the whole city was decked with red, yellow, white and blue flags (see Kshit. 56, 19 sq.). 25. 26.

„After a time Raghurāma transmitted the realm to Kṛishnachandra, while he devoted himself to the service of Īṣvara.“

If this report be compared with that given in the Kshit., it will be noticed, that the difference between both is considerable, and, what is remarkable, becomes greater the nearer the time of the events related approaches to that of the relators. The most striking instance of this difference might be found in the history of the three Râjas immediately preceding Kṛṣṇachandra, viz. Râmajîvana, Râmakṛishṇa, and Raghurâma. Both authors must assuredly have known the true facts of the case, and one of them must have knowingly reported them incorrectly; and that being so, the recital of the Kshit. seems preferable for its impartiality and detail. A native author, who, probably at the court and by invitation of his king, writes the history of the latter's ancestors, would never falsely impute to them so unhappy and little honorable fates as captivity in the prison of a Mohammedan governor, nor would he dare merely to invent so important facts as the dethronement and restoration of a king of his own country. And of all this the author of the Kshit. would be guilty, if the account of the Bengâlî biographer is correct, which makes Râmajîvana quietly succeed his brother in the government, knows nothing of Raghurâma's captivity at Murshedabad, and lets Râmakṛishṇa disregard without punishment the stipulated tribute, while in the Kshit. all these kings appear in a state of the greatest dependence upon the Mohammedans. Perhaps also this impartiality may have conferred to its inferior popularity.

If for the reason expressed we give greater credit to the Kshit., than to the Bengâlî account, we are on the other hand somewhat puzzled by the chronology of the former, though on the first view it seems to be extremely accurate. The Bengâlî work unfortunately gives, so far as the events reported there coincide with those of the Kshit., no chronological dates at all, which might otherwise have served to regulate those given in the Kshit. A list of the kings from Bhaṭṭanârâyaṇa, together with the duration of their respective reigns, is the following: Bhaṭṭanârâyaṇa 24 years, Nipu 28, Halâyudha 15, Harihara 20, Kandarpa 22, Viçvambhara 28, Narahari 27, Nârâyaṇa 24, Priyankara 29, Dharmângada 20, Târâpati 47, Kâma 32, Viçvanâtha 31, Râmachandra 23, Subuddhi 25, Trilôchana 30, Kaṃsârî 26, Shashṭhidâsa 29, Kâçinâtha 34; now ensues a period from the death of Kâçinâtha to the saṃskâra of his posthumous son Râma Samuddhâra, which, according to the analogy of Durgādâsa's age at the time of his saṃskâra (10, 17), we may assume to have been 11 or 12 years, as it is given also in the Bengâlî Kṛṣṇachandra. Then Râma Samuddhâra reigns for 36 years, Durgādâsa (Bhavânanda Maj.) 20, Gopâla 7, Râghava 51, Rudrarâya 11, Râmajîvana 10, Râmakṛṣṇa 11, Raghurâma 13, Kṛṣṇachandra. The sum of these reigns together makes 685 years; these added to the Çakayear 1000 (that, in which Bhaṭṭa bought from king Âdisûra the five villages which formed the germ of his realm), gives 1685 as the year of Kṛṣṇachandra's accession to the throne; but this latter took place, according to the assertion of our author himself, Ç. 1650 (A. D. 1728), and we have, therefore, a difference of 35 years. To get rid of this difference it would be necessary, either to remove the year in which Bhaṭṭanârâyana became sovereign lord of the five villages for 35 years, or to diminish the period falling between this event and the accession of Kṛṣṇachandra. The former would not seem to be venturing too much, if it be considered, that the year of Bhaṭṭanârâyana's bargain is given as just Ç. 1000, which almost seems to invite the conjecture, that it was given only in favor of a round number; the statement, however, in Ritter's Geography (VI. 1244; after which authority, I do not know), that king Adisûra reigned about the year Ç. 990, coincides too well with our date to allow of removing the latter to 25 years before Ç. 990. The other expedient is no less impracticable. It is true, that in the Bengâlî Biography it is not expressly said, that Râma Samuddhâra, who was adopted by Harikrṣṇa Samuddhâra (or Viçvanâtha Samâdvâra), succeeded the latter in the government; if, therefore, we could throw out the 36 years of government which are attributed to this prince in the Kshit., the difference would be reduced to but one year. Yet this is impossible; for it is, of course, necessary, that a longer period than twelve years must have elapsed between the death of his father, whose posthumous son he was, and the accession of his own son. As to chronology, we are, therefore, rather at a loss, for of synchronisms too we have but very few. At first the notice, that Viçvanātha (316—347 after Ç. 1000, or 1394—1425 A. D.) was contemporary with Mahmud of Ghazna († 1030), is so far absurd, but quite correct, if taken as a confusion with Malumud Toghluck (1394—1398 A. D.); another statement, which makes Kâçinātha (480—514 after Ç. 1000, or 1558—1592 A. D.) a contemporary of Akbar the Great (1556—1605 A. D.), and a third, that Aurengzeb (1657—1707 A. D.) was contemporary with Rāmakriṣṇa, who acceded to the throne 24 years before Kṛiṣṇachandra i. e. A. D. 1704, are both quite correct; and so is the notice given in the Bengālī work, that the majmuat-dār Bhavānanda, who died 103 years before the accession of Kṛiṣṇachandra i. e. A. D. 1625, after a reign of 20 years, and who, therefore, ruled 1605—1625 A. D., lived at the same time with Jehāngir Shāh (1605—1627 A. D.).

It remains now, to say yet a few words respecting the manner in which the translation, the notes and the indices have been composed. — The whole has been written in English, because it was hoped, that the little book might be of some interest for India itself; and there a German translation and other additions in German would have been less likely to be understood even than the original itself. — In the translation it has been attempted, to adhere to the original as closely as possible without violating too much the genius of the English language. As to the proper names, for the Sanskrit forms of Mohammedan names have been substituted the Arabic-Persian forms, wherever I felt tolerably sure of the latter; and to some of the most known and famous cities the names, by which they are known with us, have been given, while respecting those places, for which the names given by the original have been retained, Index II is to be consulted. The diffuse circumscriptions for subahdâr and zemîndâr could, of course, not be retained, but were always translated by „Mohammedan governor“, the original too not discriminating between subahdâr and zemîndâr but circumscribing both offices by almost the same terms. The Persian titles which are mentioned in the text have been retained, but in their original Persian form, and an explanation of their meaning has been given in the notes: to express their real sense by a translation would have rendered necessary heavy circumscriptions. — For easier reference the pages of the text have been put on the margin of the translation. — The notes have by numbers been referred to the translation, those too, which belong to the text, in order to avoid disfiguring the Sanskrit text with interspersed numbers or signs. — The table of various readings, far from giving all differences of the two mss. from the text received, exhibits only those, as seemed to be of some interest, either for the sense, or for the language and orthography. — The indices finally give both a short view of the history of each person and locality as it is related in our Kshit., and whatever else I have been able to learn in respect to them, chiefly the identification of the Indian geographical names with those used commonly on maps and in European books.

And thus I make over this little labor of mine to the judgement of the learned, who occupy themselves with the study of Sanskrit, confiding in their indulgence; and if only the application and zeal, with which I have labored it, shall not entirely fail of acknowledgment, I shall feel content, and encouraged to pursue the path of study which I have chosen for my life.

Veneration to the holy Rāmachandra!

Vālmiki became the most celebrated ornament of the race of poets by exalting the lineage of the sun; the son of Parāçara made himself chief among the poets by glorifying the eminent race of Bharata. Who can win distinction in the three-fold world if he does not extol great renown? Therefore do we celebrate the family of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa which sweeps away the pollution of the iron age. (1).

In ancient times there lived in Vanga a prince called Adisūra, who ruled over his subjects with the eye of law, as if they had been his children. One day a vulture alighted upon his palace, whereon the king having seen and taken it for a sign of future misfortune, convoked a great assembly of Pandits and asked: „Hear ye, Pandits! a vulture has rushed down upon my house, which leads me to apprehend a misfortune. What rite can avert it?“ The Pandits answered all together: „Your Majesty, this vulture must be killed and an oblation made of its flesh. This will be the proper expiation.“ „But how shall I catch this vulture“, replied the king, „or what kind of sacrifice is it that must be made of its flesh? Explain it clearly!“ Upon this all the others were silent, while one Brahman who was sitting in the assembly and who a few days before had come from Kānyakubja, thus spoke: „I had gone to Kānyakubja on account of a procession 2.

to a holy place, and at that time a vulture descended upon the king's palace just as upon your Majesty's. Then the king of Kānyakubja convoking Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa and the other Brahmans retained the vulture by means of charms and offered a sacrifice of its flesh. Of this I was eye-witness, and I advise your Majesty after convoking Bhaṭṭa and the others to act in like manner."

- The king accordingly sent messengers with this Brahman, and having ordered to bring Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa, Dakṣha, Çriharsha, Çhihandada and Vedagarbha before him together with their wives, their holy fire and all their sacrificial apparatus, assigned to them a house which he had previously built, in the Çaka-year 999. The next morning the Brahmans having said their morning prayers and performed all their other rites left their wives at home, took grass and fried grain in their hands and went to pay their respects to the king. But the latter from the roof of his palace seeing the Brahmans from afar with their feet enclosed in leather shoes, their bodies covered with embroidered garments, their lips and eye-lids colored brown with betel nut which they had chewed during their travel, expressed his disregard by remaining in his place (²). The Brahmans, who had not noticed the king, stepped up to the door, saying to the doorkeeper: "Hark you! inform the king, that we, the Kānyakubjans have come to his door." The doorkeeper having withdrawn for a while returned and said: "Ye Brahmans! the king has just lain down to sleep; this is not the time of audience." Upon this the Brahmans, although perceiving the disrespect of the king, overcame their irritation and wrath, then uttered a charm and put the grain, grass
3. and the other things they had brought along for the ceremony of the salutation in five places upon a dry wrestler's staff leaning near the door; whereupon they went home. The next day from this wrestler's staff five boughs covered with young shoots had grown forth. Seeing this the doorkeeper and his companions with great surprise referred the matter to the king, who having come to the place wondering asked, how it was with this miraculous event? „Your Majesty“, answered the doorkeeper and his companions, „the five Brahmans from Kānyakubja having spoken spells put fried grain, grass and other things in five places upon this dry staff, and in consequence of this boughs have grown forth from it although it was dry and withered.“ „You are right“, said the king, and wishing to atone for his offence fastened his clothes round his neck and going with his retinue to the Brahmans saluted them, saying: „You are virtuous and of divine nature; we are ignorant and do not understand your greatness. After this confession it is reasonable that you should pardon my fault.“ Thus and in many other ways he praised them; but they, whose virtue exalted them above anger, answered: „O king, we are not angry, be sure of that; for if we had been angry, your city and retinue would be now but a mere heap of ashes. Enough then of ceremony. Rather carry out that on account of which we have been summoned.“

The king thereupon honored them with a banquet, and 4. having obtained their permission went to his city to prepare, as he had been ordered, the sacrificial apparatus. This being done, he informed the Brahmans of it and asked them to perform the sacrifice. Thus summoned by the king, Bhaṭṭa and his companions captured the vulture by means of spells consisting of magic songs and performed the sacrifice with its flesh according to rule.

The king having rewarded them with the presents due them said with a cheerful heart: „Out of kindness towards me, you worthy men, consent to accept a dwelling here!“ Bhaṭṭa, in whose face Dakṣha and the other three Brahmans doubtfully looked, answered: as your Majesty commands. The king, rejoiced at the fulfilment of his wish, built five cities filled with multitudes of palaces to serve as dwelling-places for the five Brahmans, and presented them to them. There they lived for one year.

- At this time the king being much pleased with the supernatural exploits of Bhaṭṭa, who was son of a famous and powerful king in Kānyakubja called Kshitṭṭa, said: „Sir, I will make you a present of some villages; favor me, I pray you, by accepting them.“ „I cannot accept your villages“, said Bhaṭṭa, „filled with cattle, gold, sesamum, iron and similar precious things, since they are an improper present for me“ (3). To which the king: „What then can your obliged servant do? or how shall I ensure my happiness in the other world?“ „It is known that I possess much wealth“, answered Bhaṭṭa, „with it I will buy some villages and you may sell them to me. If you really wish to do me a favor, you can in this manner do so suitably.“ The king having consented, Bhaṭṭa bought at a very low price many villages, to whose revenues he added those from the other ones (which he possessed already); and these villages he had purchased were enjoyed by him exempted from taxation for twenty four years. (4)

CHAPTER II.

King Bhaṭṭa died and went to the other world, leaving behind him sixteen sons, rich in virtues like their father, in the highest degree adorned with good behaviour, modesty and knowledge, and therefore respected by everybody. They were called Âdivarâha, Vâṭu, Vâma, Nâna, Nipu, Guṇi, Guntu, Asântu, Guṇa, Vika, Anila, Madhu, Kâma, Deva, Soma, Adîna. (5) Then Âdivarâha and the three brothers next to him in age, being highly indifferent towards worldly objects and given to holy penance, anointed as king Nipu, who as for his age stood between them and the other eleven younger brothers, and being versed in royal polity was fit for the superintendence of the kingdom, and full of graciousness. Diligent in the study of the Vedas, in offering sacrifices and in the performance of the Vaidic, legal and other precepts he ruled for twenty eight years with justice over his subjects, living at Keçaragrâma where he had built a splendid palace. From that time till now his descendants are called lords of Keçaragrâma.

He having gone to the other world, his son Halâyudha, beloved of all men, governed the realm with justice for fifteen years. After the death of Halâyudha his son Harihara, endowed with great excellence, was king for twenty years. After he had gone to rest, his son Kandarpa sat on the throne for twenty eight years. When he after governing his realm had passed to the other world, his son Viçvanbhara, endowed with a treasure of all virtues, reigned over his subjects for twenty eight years. After his death his son Narahari, a man incomparably rich in virtues, protected the realm for twenty seven years. He being dead, his son, who was called Nârâyana and possessed virtues similar to those of Nârâyana, guarded his kingdom for twenty four years. When he was dead, his son, called Priyankara (amiable) because he was beloved by the whole world, was king for twenty nine years. After his death his son Dharmângada became king, and when the latter after a reign of twenty years had expired, his son Târâpati ruled for forty seven years. After his decease his son Kâma governed for thirty two years. 6.

These eleven princes ruled happily and without paying tribute over the realm which had been bought from king Adisûra.

CHAPTER III.

The four sons of king Kâma, Viçvanâtha and his brothers, fought against each other, each of them wishing to obtain a part of the kingdom; but having heard that at this time the famous Persian, sultan Mahmud of Ghazna, had vanquished the lord of Delhi and founded in the city of the latter a kingdom under his own dominion, they addressed themselves to him as to a supreme lord. But he, although for a long while not able to compose the differences of the brothers, yet desired them to pay him tribute from their realms. And Viç- 7.

vanātha agreed to pay it from his, as reward for which he got by order of the sultan the whole kingdom of his father, while his three brothers who refused to pay tribute, saying that they ought not to do so for a kingdom which they had obtained from their father exempt from taxes, got no share in the government. Viçvanātha being on good terms with the sultan added to his paternal kingdom Kāṃkadi and many other countries, and reigned for thirty one years with great renown. Since this time these kings are also subject to tribute.

After Viçvanātha's death Rāmachandra paying the tribute obtained the kingdom and ruled happily for twenty three years. When he was dead, his son, prince Subuddhi, became king for twenty five years. The latter left his kingdom to his son, prince Trilochana, who passed to the other world after a reign of thirty years. After his death his son Kāṃsāri succeeded him, and left his kingdom after governing twenty six years to Shashthīdāsa, who sat on the throne for twenty nine years. After the latter's death his son, prince Kāçinātha, was king for thirty four years.

- Under the government of this prince it happened, that
8. from a troop of elephants which were sent from the king of Tripura to Akbar, sultan of Delhi, one large elephant escaped, and straying about in a great forest now and then broke into villages and alarmed their inhabitants. Kāçinātha having been one day informed that this elephant had broken into one of his villages and put all the inhabitants to flight, gathered many soldiers about him and put the animal to death. But this occurrence having been circumstantially made known to the sultan of Delhi by his resident, the former was much enraged at the information and ordered by letter the Mohammedan governor of Jāmhāgīra to take Kāçinātha prisoner and bring him into his presence, assigning him an army for the purpose. The governor upon the receipt of this order charged a great army to capture Kāçinātha and bring him to Delhi. But Kāçinātha had likewise been informed of all through his spies, and by the advice of his counsellors set out and fled toward the bank of the Bhâgîrathî, while the army of the Mohammedan governor constantly followed upon his rear, until at last the Mohammedan army and Kâçînâtha were separated only one day's journey. At this time Kâçînâtha having arrived in the region called Vâgoyâna took his position to pass the river which touched the eastern part of the village of Ânduliyâ. There a certain fisherwoman came to the camp to sell her fish. Kâçînâtha at sight of them became glad, meditating thus: since a long time I have eaten no fish, and yet I have now no money; how then can I purchase these fish? After a while he threw the golden diamond-ring he wore on his hand to the fisherwoman, took a large fish and said: „A servant of mine who will follow me, shall pay you a suitable price which I will fix, and shall redeem my ring.“ Shortly after, when the soldiers of the Mohammedan governor being arrived at the spot saw this splendid golden diamond-ring on the hand of the fisherwoman, they asked: „Tell us, fisherwoman, where you got this precious ring, and quickly too; if you do not, we shall know you have stolen it. Then we will inform of it the prince of this country, and you shall be punished as you deserve.“ Being thus addressed the fisherwoman trembling replied: „A Brahman bought a fish of me, and having pledged this ring for the price of it went off to get the money to pay for it.“ The soldiers of the governor answered: „Where is this Brahman? Show him to us!“ Thereupon the fisherwoman having sought for him and found him after bathing in that river (the Bhâgîrathî) quite absorbed in the veneration of the deity, made it known to them; upon which the army of the governor took him prisoner. Some of his retinue escaped; but Kâçînâtha himself, when it had been announced by the army that he was a prisoner, being put to death by the irritated king while in the act of uttering with a loud voice the names of the blessed Nârâyana, obtained after his death a beatitude unattainable even by holy ascetics. The wife of Kâçînâtha, who was with 9.

10. child, took with her two hundred pounds of gold, one male and one female slave and one officiating Brahman, and went to live in the house of Harikriṣṇa Samuddhāra, as though it had been that of her father.

CHAPTER IV.

After a time at the auspicious rising of all propitious planets the wife of Kācīnātha bore a son distinguished with all the auspicious marks. On account of his beautiful (ramaṇīya) body the Pandits gave him the name of Rāma, and Samuddhāra, being himself without a son, loved him more than such a one. When he had attained the age of a youth, having acquired during his childhood like the holy Rāma himself all kinds of knowledge, undergone also the ceremony of investiture, and studied the books of law, Samuddhāra, who doted on him for his amiable qualities and his descent from an illustrious family, installed him in the government over his own kingdom; and all his ministers submitted to this arrangement of his. In consideration of Rāma's being born in the house and having obtained the kingdom of Samuddhāra, he was everywhere known by the name of Rāma Samuddhāra. Having married a wife, his equal in virtue and nobility, he begot with her four sons, called Durgādāsa, Jagadīca, Harivallabha and Subuddhi.

The eldest brother, prince Durgādāsa, just after having undergone in his eleventh year the ceremony of investiture, was once sojourning on the bank of the river which flows near Vallabhapura, to witness there sports and dances.

11. At this time a Mohammedan governor sent by the sultan of Delhi arrived there in boats with a great army, upon which the retinue of Durgādāsa seeing the army fled for fear, while Durgādāsa quietly maintained his place. Then the governor asked him: „Tell me, Brahman, how many kroças*) is it from here to the city known by the name of Hugali? and which road leads thither? Inform me, if you know!" Hereon Durgâdâsa, who by hunters and fishermen had been made familiar with all the ways, told him every thing at length, the road leading thither, the number of the villages situated near it, that of the bends of the river, their measure and their content of water; all this he explained as if he had seen it with his own eyes. The governor being very much pleased with his beauty, wisdom and intrepidity said: „I am highly satisfied with your fearlessness and other virtues; come with me then to the country of Hugali." Durgâdâsa having taken counsel with his brothers consented.

Durgâdâsa having accompanied the governor and having after many expressions of esteem received from him clothes, ornaments and such like, as well as money to be spent for delicacies, was appointed by him to read in Persian books; and having then by the aid of his superior intelligence acquired in a very short time the essence of all Persian knowledge, he excited the utmost satisfaction of the governor, who to express his content appointed him by an order to the office of a kânûngô⁽⁶⁾, as it is called in the Persian language. But Durgâdâsa said: „We are kings by inheritance and know not how to serve others." The governor answered: „Then I will write to the Sultan of Delhi that he grant you a title and a kingdom; but now do as I bid you." Having then without delay obeyed his directions, Durgâdâsa received after some time the title of Majmuat - dâr⁽⁷⁾ Bhavânanda, which the Sultan of Delhi conferred upon him, and on this account remained in his office of a kânûngô.

Some time after, having come home and made a division with his brothers, he built a palace at Vallabhapura, and having obtained the realm of his father Samuddhâra governed for twenty years. The other princes lived happily, each of them having built a palace, prince Harivallabha at Phatepura, Jagadîca at Kuḍâlagâchhi, and prince Subuddhi at Pâṭikâvâḍi.

At this time there lived in Vanga and the adjacent countries twelve kings enjoying their kingdoms exempt from taxation, the first of whom was Pratâpâditya. Among them the latter was a most excellent ruler, conqueror of the hosts of his enemies, possessor of great wealth, and famous throughout the whole earth. The sultan of Delhi wishing to obtain tribute from these princes sent many armies, and actually succeeded in subduing eleven kings; but Pratâpâditya having repeatedly vanquished the Delhian armies shone as if he had been himself a second sultan of Delhi. At this time the governors of Jâmhâgira and Hugali informed the sultan of Delhi of the manifold baseness of Pratâpâditya, that he oppressed with his numerous armies the little princes, for before his door stood fifty two thousand soldiers armed with shields, fifty one thousand archers, many horsemen, many herds of furious elephants, besides innumerable soldiers armed with mallets and darts. In 13. a word, that he frequently killed even his relations. That an infant of his family, whose father and other relations had been put to death by him, had escaped and been brought up by his nurse in the Kachvi-forest, wherefrom he got the name of prince Kachu. That this prince being versed in Persian and other science, of a compassionate heart and possessing all distinguishing marks of a king, Pratâpâditya tried daily to kill him. That he sought also to subject themselves, and that therefore, if the sultan would send an officer of high rank accompanied by many generals with elephants, horses and so forth, they would follow him and having captured Pratâpâditya would deliver him up. These and other things of a like character they wrote to the sultan of Delhi.

A short time after, the sultan of Delhi being informed by this letter of the baseness of Pratâpâditya, and finding the report confirmed by the presence of prince Kachu who had come to Delhi, ordered, his lower lip swollen with wrath, an officer of high rank called Mânasimpha, together with twenty two generals, to march out with a large army, and after taking Pra-tâpâditya prisoner to bring him as soon as possible into his presence. Hereupon Mânasimha put the order upon his head^(*), saying: Your Majesty is by this commission conferring a great favor upon me, and set out, followed by a large army; and wherever he stopped, the inhabitants fled away and the kings generally disappeared. Some days after, the Mohammedan army having come to the banks of the river which flows near Châpada, all the kings of the adjacent countries for fear hid themselves with their retinues, with the exception only of the Majmuat-dâr Bhavânanda, who, intrepid as he was, came near and after the customary good-wishes saluted Mânasimha putting off from his hand his golden ring and other ornaments and offering them (as a tribute). Having thus gained the favor of Mânasimha he said: „Lord of great power! on your arrival all kings of this land have fled; only I, lord of a few villages, have remained here to see your Grace, the king of justice; if you desire me, who am here to congratulate you, to do anything for you, be pleased but to order it.“ Mânasimha answered the Majmuat-dâr: „Well then, Majmuat-dâr, make the necessary preparations for passing the river, that my soldiers may safely reach the opposite bank.“ „Mylord“, answered the Majmuat-dâr, „although I have but a small retinue, yet at the order of your Grace all shall be performed.“ Hereupon he led the whole army of Mânasimha with its elephants and horses safely over by means of various boats, transports and other vessels; when Mânasimha himself had reached the opposite bank, he praised the Majmuat-dâr. But having with his train crossed the river he met with foul weather which lasted for seven days, and during which no difference was to be observed between day and night; for the host of the stars and the sun were covered, the heavenly spaces rent with mighty tempests, and the globe drenched with drops of rain falling without interruption. It was impossible to march on in any direction, and the whole army was in great dejection. Not long before this the Majmuat-dâr had accumulated a great store of various

- provisions for celebrating the high feast of the nuptials between 15. the images of Lakshmi and Govinda, but being now by law forbidden it on account of the excessively rainy weather, with his characteristic wisdom he took his store, and having added yet more provisions to it, supplied Mânasimha as well as his generals, heralds and bards, and his elephants, horses and foot-soldiers, to their high satisfaction. In this way Mânasimha spent happily even this foul weather and after seven days, when it was over and the face of the heavens became visible again, he in the highest degree gratified addressed the Majmuat-dâr: „Tell me, after how many days or on what day can I arrive from here at the capital of Pratâpâditya? and on which side is the entrance of the army practicable? Write it down accurately and give it to me.“ The Majmuat-dâr having according to this order written everything accurately down and handed it to Mânasimha, was praised by the latter with many fine words and graciously addressed in this way: „Oh highminded Majmuat-dâr, when I return again after the subjection of Pratâpâditya, you shall utter a wish, and I will certainly grant it. But come yourself along with me to the capital of Pratâpâditya.“ Thus much having spoken he was silent. Some days after Mânasimha reached the city of Pratâpâditya with his great army.

- But Pratâpâditya, having learned through his spies the whole story of Mânasimha's approach, had drawn up the bulk of his forces in a stronghold which he had rendered nearly inaccessible, and being therefore not reached by the darts and javelins thrown by the soldiers of Mânasimha, signally defeated the army of the latter by means of his many missiles, his great forces of fifty two thousand shieldbearers, fifty one thousand archers and his host of horsemen. Being informed of this Mânasimha said angrily to his generals: „Hear ye, generals! unite all your armies at once and take that stronghold; if you do not, I shall cause you to be suitably punished.“ With these words he enjoined upon them all at once the capture of the fort; and in consequence of this order redoubling, as it were, their valor and fighting all together, their eyelids red with wrath, they captured the stronghold. After this, both the armies, that of Mānasimha and the garrison of the destroyed fortress, having come in sight of each other fiercely grappled together in many places and during many days, and each of them suffered great losses. Then Mānasimha, perceiving that but very few horsemen were left in the army of Pratâpāditya, and taking counsel thereon with the Majmuat-dâr, attended by various troops of elephants and horse attacked at once with thousands upon thousands of horsemen the army of Pratâpāditya, and having destroyed it in an instant, fettered Pratâpāditya, threw him into an iron cage, and turned back toward the Mahommedan emperor who resided at Delhi. Some time after this having come to Châpada, he called the Majmuat-dâr before him and addressed him as follows: „I have been highly pleased by the zeal which you have manifested in this war, and you also have saved the lives of my soldiers during the foul weather, which lasted without interruption for seven days. Utter, therefore, any wish you please, and I will certainly fulfil it.“ Being thus directed, the Majmuat-dâr related the whole story of the coming of Bhaṭṭanârâyaṇa to the town of Adisûra, the succession of his family in the government, the flight of king Kâcînâtha and his being killed by the Mo- 17. hammedan Sultan, and then uttered his wish to be reinstated in the government over the fourteen countries the first of which is Vâgoyâna. Having heard all this Mānasimha promised to fulfil it without fail, and departed for Delhi to wait upon the Sultan, accompanied by the Majmuat-dâr. The captive Pratâpāditya died on the way at Benares.

Soon after the arrival at Delhi Mānasimha reported there to the Sultan all the particulars of his victory, and related in full before him both the hospitality shown by the Majmuat-dâr to the whole army during those seven foul days, and his cooperation in the subjection of Pratâpāditya. Having heard this the Sultan directed that the above mentioned kinsman of Pratâpâditya, prince Kachu, should govern the kingdom of Yaçohara, and favored him with the honorary title of Yaçoharajit (i. e. conqueror of Yaçohara). As to the Majmuat-dâr, the Sultan learning his origin, that he was the son of the king Kâçinâtha who had formerly killed his elephant, and being highly satisfied with the report of the hospitality he had shown in the way described, said to Mânasiṃha: „Have you already granted a favor to the Majmuat-dâr, son of Kâçinâtha? for he is an excellent man and has assisted greatly in the subjection of Pratâpâditya.“ Mânasiṃha answered: „The Majmuat-dâr requests the government of Vâgoyâna and the other thirteen countries, and is now here; but without the order of your Majesty I did not venture the donative of a kingdom.“ On this the Sultan replied: „Bring the Majmuat-dâr before me, and also a document which shall signify that I grant him the kingdom desired.“ Upon this the Majmuat-dâr being caused by Mânasiṃha to pay his respects to the Sultan, and having accordingly done so and held much converse with him, took his leave. Then the Sultan taking counsel with Mânasiṃha agreed to give to the Majmuat-dâr, the kingdom requested, and rejoiced him with his own signature to the diploma which granted him the royal title. The Majmuat-dâr having immediately made all arrangements necessary for taking possession of the kingdom, and having been highly honored by Mânasiṃha, returned to his own country. Some time after, betaking himself to his palace which he possessed at Vallabhapura, he extended his power throughout the fourteen countries which he had obtained by order of the Sultan, and ruled over his subjects with justice. Having erected a palace both in the city called Mâṭiyâri and in the village named Dēuliya, and set up there an image, he abode there for a time.

CHAPTER V.

After a period filled up with festivals, the Mohammedan governor of Jâmhâgîra wishing to obtain the government of the Majmuat-dâr's kingdom, sent a messenger called Murad to call him into his presence, whereupon the Majmuat-dâr, hearing the matter from the mouth of the messenger, went to Jâmhâgîra, accompanied by his grandson prince Gopîramana, the son of his eldest son, prince Çrikrişna, who was of uncommon strength and whom he loved very much. Soon by the governor he was treacherously confined in prison; but his grandson daily endeavored to deliver him. One day when prince Gopîramana had gone to the river to bathe, a number of strong 19. fellows exerted themselves to bring to the landing-place a large stone intended for the veneration of the deity (of the river) that she might sit upon it, but the great weight of the rock rendered all their endeavors fruitless. Just at this time an elephant-driver was leading a great and furious elephant to water him at the spot, and the fellows said to him; „Let your great elephant help bring this great stone to the landing-place, and we will give you money as much as you want to procure food with.“ Thus addressed, the elephant-driver set his elephant at work to move the great stone, but although the elephant several times strained with his trunk to lift the rock, yet its excessive size prevented him from doing so. The elephant-driver seeing the efforts of his animal thus in vain withdrew in dejection. But Gopîramana having seen all this, called the fellows to him and said to them: „My lads, how does it happen that you are so much fatigued by your attempts to bring this rock to the landing-place? See, I will carry it there alone.“ And with these words seizing and lifting up the stone with both his arms he said to them all: „Tell me where it is to be put down.“ And he set down the rock with great ease upon the place pointed out by them. The others seeing this were all surprised, and went home praising among themselves

Gopīramāṇa's strength. The prince too went home having finished his daily rite.

20. The next day the citizens reported to the governor of Jāṇhāgīra, that (wonderful to relate) a Brahman, called Gopīramāṇa, had lifted and set down again upon the landing-place as if in sport a great stone which many men had not been able to lift, and which had foiled the efforts of a furious elephant. Hearing this the governor said to his retinue: „Where is this Brahman? Search him out and bring him before me.“ When they had done so, the governor asked the prince: „Did you lift up that great stone and put it upon the landing-place?“ The prince replied: „At the time of bathing I was able to do so thinking of your Mightiness' feet (⁹); to your Highness' greatness, therefore, is due the credit of my exploit.“ Upon this the Governor replied: „Oh Brahman, I desire you to lift that rock once more before my eyes, that I may see it.“ „Your Highness' command shall be executed“, replied the prince, and having sent many strong men with two cars he had the great stone brought up with much exertion. Then the Governor ordered the prince to lift it, and he having made the customary obeisance to the governor took up the stone with both his arms, and having asked where he was to put it, carried it to the place appointed by the governor. The latter highly gratified said to the prince: „I am much pleased with your heroic strength; if you have any wish make it known.“ „My lord“,
21. replied the prince, „I am Gopīramāṇaṣarman, grandson to the venerable Majmuat-dār Bhavānanda, the friend of Mānasimha dear to him as a brother, who by the grace of your Highness' feet was confirmed in his kingdom of Vāgoyāna and the other thirteen countries given him by the Sultan of Delhi. My grandfather lies confined in your prison because he has not paid you the arrears of the stipulated tribute; him I beseech you to release; wealth and the like I do not desire.“ The Sultan feeling much pleased with these words, ordered the jailer to take off the iron fetters which confined the Majmuat-dār's feet and to bring him before him; but prince Gopīramāṇa said: „My lord, these men will be too slow about removing the fetters; with your permission I will, my grandfather being brought hither, with my own hand unbind his feet.“ The governor gave his consent, and the Majmuat-dār being instantly brought before him, his feet bound with iron fetters, Gopīramāṇa broke them with his hand alone. All who witnessed it were astonished, and the governor having gladdened both of them with favors dismissed them. Being arrived at home they made manifold sacrifices and thank-offerings.

After this the Majmuat-dār wishing to divide his kingdom among his three sons, the princes Çrīkṛiṣṇa, Gopāla and Govindarāma, who were young men of great merit, said to them: „Take my kingdom, I have divided it into equal shares.“ But the eldest son, Çrīkṛiṣṇa, objected: „No, the kingdom shall not be divided; to the eldest, according to custom, belongs the whole.“ „You are very wise and learned“, replied the Majmuat-dār angrily, „why do you not procure yourself another kingdom?“ „If your Highness' feet permit me the observation“, answered Çrīkṛiṣṇa, „what is there wonderful in that?“⁽¹⁰⁾ With these words bowing himself before his father and having obtained his permission he went straight to Delhi, where having with much difficulty obtained an audience before the Sultan he made known to him his wishes. The Sultan being pleased with him conferred upon him the government over Khoshadaha and Ukhada, two valuable provinces. Having in this manner obtained a kingdom, he after some time returned home, and having paid the Majmuat-dār the respects due to him, related the whole story; whereupon the Majmuat-dār praised him highly.

When the Majmuat-dār, after having thus ruled happily for twenty years, passed away to the other world, Çrīkṛiṣṇa reigned over the kingdom he had gained for himself, and his two brothers over the divided realm of their father.

CHAPTER VI.

- Afterward, Çrikriṣṇa having died childless of smallpox, and prince Govinda being less competent to govern, prince Gopāla, enriched with various virtues, ruled over the kingdom
23. for seven years. When he also had died, among his three sons, the princes Narendra, Rāmeçvara and Rāghava, the first was of headstrong character and not acceptable to his subjects, and also Rāmeçvara not at all fit for the government; but prince Rāghava, as being endowed with every virtue, seeking for the welfare of his subjects and accomplished in a high degree, was made king. Giving to his brothers a certain sum every month and paying the tribute due to the Mohammedan Sultan he obtained high renown and became the confidential friend of the latter. After a time he erected in the village called Rēui a beautiful residence, and built to the east and to the west of it two palaces like mountains, and in the south a seraglio with a multitude of magnificent palaces. There he lived happily for a time. Some time after, the king of Sāta-sāikā, called Saifkhān, a dear friend of Rāghava, came to this city to see the latter. When then after mutual salutations and the other customary ceremonies they were seated at ease and conversing in a friendly manner together, the Mohammedan king said to Rāghava: „Great and mighty king, although here in your own city, you live as it were the whole twelve months in exile.“ „Why, my friend“, answered Rāghava, „how can you assert, that one who lives in his own city spends his time in exile?“ „What other name“, replied his friend, „can be given to the dwelling of him, who lives where he hears neither the weeping of his children nor the tinkling of ornaments?“ Rā-
24. ghava assented, and having entertained the Mohammedan king to his satisfaction with all fit hospitality, suffered him to depart. Some time after, instigated by this speech of the Mohammedan, he destroyed the seraglio which stood to the south far ⁽¹¹⁾ from his palace, and built another beautiful one of grass, wood and other materials in the north near his own dwelling. He erected also a palace in a village called Mādurnā, and both the palaces were royal residences full of happy and well-fed servants. Thus, owing to his orderly instituted venerations of the god of love, he became famous throughout all the land by the multitude of songs, to which he gave the occasion.

Some time after this he began to dig a great pond, but though he spent upon it twelve thousand silver pieces, yet he saw no signs of water coming forth. He, therefore, removed the superintendent who was set over the digging of the pond, called Çivarāmabhāgyavat, and employed in his place another clever man, to whom he gave fifteen thousand silver pieces. Many men being constantly employed in digging the pond, all at once a stream of water gushed forth from a vein which they had struck beneath in the middle of the pond, and having during seven days flooded even the most distant fields, gardens, and towns, emptied itself into the Gangā. After seven days, when the current of this stream had ceased to flow, it remained quiet in the pond which it had filled. On the eastern shore of this pond the king built a palace of bricks, in size like the mountain Kailāsa, and at the same time bought for 300,000 silver pieces besides what was to be contributed by each city, a great mass of things necessary for the dedication of the tank and for the erection of a phallus of Çiva in the palace. He 25. then invited many Brahmans from Anga, Vanga, Magadha, Kāçî, Kāñçî and other countries, and besides these, kings, princes and ministers from various regions, who glad by the hospitality shown them dwelt in various temporary habitations of bricks, trees, wood, cloth and the like, and filled with provisions, which had been erected both on the shore of the tank and in villages. Here too were for the use of the Brahmans and the others who were not invited, hundredfold streams of clarified butter, milk and honey, together with spirituous liquors, which were consumed⁽¹²⁾ as fast as the servants, who guarded them for the hungry Brahmans and the other guests, served them up. Here were also to be found mountain-like heaps of barley, wheat and other flour, and immense stores of rice, peas and soup. At the sight of all these preparations the princes and whoever else had been invited celebrated aloud the glory of king Rāghava. Soon, the dedication of the tank and phallus being accomplished by priests similar to the teacher of the gods, in the middle of the great assembly of wise princes from all countries, the king dismissed the invited crowds, having entertained them to their heart's content. The whole remnant of the purchases of stores of clarified butter, wheat and flour he had formerly made, he presented to the Brahmans. By the wonderful arrangements here described Rāghava rendered himself highly celebrated.

26. Up to this time the kings of Gaur and the adjacent countries had never obtained a donative of elephants from the Sultan of Delhi; but Rāghava, gratifying the latter by the payment of the fixed tribute and by his presents, obtained it for the first time. Some time after this, having set up at Navadvīpa a statue of Gaṇeṣa, he began to erect a building of bricks which should contain a phallus of Maheṣa. When however this was but half finished, he expired and attained the final felicity, having thus ruled over the earth for fifty one years as if he had been the chief of the gods.

CHAPTER VII.

Rāghava had two sons, the princes Rudrarāya and Viṣvanātha, of whom Rudrarāya, who was rich with virtues like his father, became king. Having finished the building which his father had begun at Navadvīpa, he erected there, following the example of his father, a phallus of Śiva, which he called Rāghaveśvara (the lord of Rāghava). The Sultan of Delhi gave to Rudrarāya the government over the two countries Khadī and Judī and, as a token of his favor, the title of a Mahārāja; further, the permission which no other prince had yet been able to obtain, to erect upon his palace a story which in Persian is called kangurah (¹³), and a donation of arrows, flags, drums and the like. [As a suitable return for this, Rudrarâya made him a gift of one thousand head of cattle and the sixteen other great gifts among which was a mass of gold equal to Rudrarâya's own weight.

Leading always a virtuous life, a friend of truth, liberal, compassionate, he ruled over his subjects like another Yudhishtira. The place Rëui he called Kṛishṇanagara in honor of Kṛishṇa and because many herdsmen lived there, and seeing in Mādurnâ great numbers of lotus flowers, he gave the place the name of Çṛinagara. Near Kṛishṇanagara flows a small river, which, however, is wont to rise in the rainy season; at such times boats used to come and go there. One year a Mohammedan general attempted to stop with his boat at a landing-place near the seraglio of Kṛishṇanagara, which the servants of Rudrarâya endeavored to prevent by such harsh words as: you may not stop here, Mohammedan! you must go farther away! and the like. From words it came to blows between them, and on both sides some lives were lost. After the expiration of one year, damming up this same river to the North and South, he constructed a canal containing an abundance of water and extending northward and southward, connected with the ditch which surrounded the city. Six years after his accession he was summoned by the governor of Jâmhâgîra, who wished to obtain the tribute from his realm, but he did not make his appearance. On this the governor, called Sâristhakhân, sent messengers to bring Rudrarâya before him; and the latter on their arrival made every effort in their power to accomplish their mission. But Rudrarâya having bribed them with a considerable present, sent the tribute to the governor of Jâmhâgîra, but did not appear personally before him. Upon this the governor highly irritated wrote to the governors of Murshedabâd, Mrijânagara and Hugly and some others who were subjected to him, that Rudrarâya affecting an equality with himself, although repeatedly summoned before him, had never obeyed the summons; and that they must by some stratagem or other take him prisoner and bring him to his city. By this order he caused Rudrarāya to be enticed by some trick into the neighborhood of Hugly, to be there surrounded by a body of soldiers and brought to Jāmhāgira. On his arrival there Rudrarāya paid the governor his respects saluting him with the customary ceremonies, in return for which the governor honored him repeatedly with gracious and friendly conversations. About this time it happened one day that Rudrarāya after a conversation with the governor, going home from the residence to his own dwelling, saw in a shop near the road a merchant who was dealing in leather shoes, and remarking the beauty of the shoes gave orders to his servants to buy some of them. But as they could not agree respecting the price, a dispute arose between them, in which the merchant manifested disrespect towards the servant as he was about to turn and go away, by putting down one shoe and beating it with another, using at the same time the insulting words: „such higgling is worthy only of beggars; get you gone from here!“ But Rudrarāya, who on hearing this was quite distracted with rage, ordered his servants to lay hold of the fellow and after beating him severely with the shoes to throw him out of his shop. The other shoe merchants who had seen the affair, having laid their comrade upon a bed

29. hastened to inform the governor of the Mahārāja's misconduct; but the latter out of fear sent also a minister of his to the governor with a letter in which he promised to pay a fine of one hundred thousand silver pieces. The governor having learned by inquiry the whole matter, was astounded at the prince's violence; but as the latter's servant just then came to deliver him the above mentioned letter, he read it and by and by tore it with a smile, and said: „The prince has only punished some scoundrels who had transgressed their proper limits; I can not, therefore, be angry with him, I can only praise him. If I were to punish him on account of his rough treatment of you, how then could good citizens abide in my city or rest there? On the contrary, the scoundrels would then gain the upper hand. The prince, therefore, has acted for the public welfare." With these and like words having encouraged the minister of the prince, he dismissed him. Meanwhile the prince having bought all the shoes for a sum of ten thousand pieces, and distributed them among the people, excited by this deed the high satisfaction of the governor, who dismissed him after bestowing upon him a donative of elephants, horses and the like, and granted him any wish he might choose. Upon this a man called Harinârâyana, who held the office of a kânîngô, hearing of the great favor which had been bestowed by the governor upon the Mahârâja, said to his followers in an irritated manner, and so that it must come to the ears of Rudrarâya: „You know the great honor which has been conferred upon Rudrarâya; he has prepared 30. to depart without paying me a visit, and takes no notice of me; see, then, what is to be done in the matter!“ Rudrarâya being informed of this said in return: „Prince Harinârâyana owes his office to money, and I owe my kingdom to money too.“ With these words seeing a large bambu staff, the end of which was provided with a sharp iron point, standing near, (he continued) with a loud voice: „While I can give a heap of gold high enough to cover an upright staff as long as this here, where is the gold of Harinârâyana, to do the same?“ (182.) A servant of Harinârâyana who was near by and heard this speech, instantly went away to report it to his master, whereon the latter, trembling for fear that he should lose his office, went forth to wait upon Rudrarâya, who well pleased went himself to meet him. Harinârâyana having paid court to him with many flattering words dismissed him home. Having thus obtained permission to return, the prince took home with him an architect called Âlâvakhaça, by whose aid he began after his arrival to erect his palace at Kṛishṇanagara; in the first place he built four palaces eastward from his own palace,

- with a road leading through the lower story capable of serving as a path for elephants, horses, carriages and the like; they were moreover very high and able to furnish a commodious lodging for many persons in their extensive middle story, while the upper story rejoiced the eye with its variegated hues. These four palaces were situated towards the four quarters of heaven, and made an agreeable impression by their symmetry. After these palaces he built a large elephant hall and a beautiful stable. Further he had erected by his architect above the just mentioned buildings a palace of brick in which was a concert hall (¹⁴); then another the midst of which was adorned by a road leading to the palace door; in the West of the latter a temple to the goddess Durgâ rejoicing the heart of all who saw it, and another to the East of great beauty; finally a seraglio embellished with numbers of the most pleasing edifices. At the same time he built from the south western quarter of Kṛishṇanagara a causeway high as a man and very broad as far as Çāntipura, and planted on both sides of it rows of holy fig trees, leaving proper intervals between them; then he dedicated it according to rule.

He led a very righteous life and found his pleasure in a truly Brahmanical behavior. While he stayed at Jāṇhāgīra, the governor being pleased with him had presented him a robe woven of gold and other precious stuffs, and a very valuable shawl to be worn as a turban; as well as flags, arrows, drums and such things. It is a custom then, in accepting the gift of a drum, having lifted it upon one's shoulder, to pay to one's lord the due reverence. When then in the present case the drum bearer was preparing for the same ceremony, the prince said to the persons present: „As a Brahman, I may not take the drum upon my shoulder; for doing so I should contaminate myself.“ The others replied: „How! this is once for all the traditionary custom of all officers; how is it possible then to do otherwise?“ The prince replied: „If this be so, the gift of the drum is not for me.“ The governor then being informed by the drum bearers of the whole matter, gave orders, that if Brahmans be contaminated by lifting a drum, Rudrarâya should not be forced to do so, but the do- 32.

native should nevertheless be given him. It is likewise custom during an audience before a Mohammedan Sultan, or such a person, to put on an embroidered garment covering all the limbs, and another embroidered upper garment reaching from the feet as far as the waist. But the prince had only put on a garment with three hems and not embroidered, on account of which the persons surrounding the governor happening to see it said: „Why do you come in such an attire to pay your respects to the governor when it is forbidden by the etiquette of the court?“ „Virtuous Brahmans“, replied Rudrarâya, „use to wear such a garment as mine; but by court dresses they are contaminated.“ The governor overhearing this conversation said to his retinue: „How can you say so? If by any custom Brahmans are contaminated, why should they be required to follow it?“ On this decision the courtiers were silent; and in this way the governor being pleased with Rudrarâya was wont always to take the latter's part.

Rudrarâya was also a great composer of quarrels. Once a quarrel between two Brahmans of Mâṭiyâri about sharing their inheritance was brought before the king, who being informed of all, saw, that the partition of their share having already taken place, there was nothing more to be divided, and that, therefore, they were merely quarrelling without reason. He, therefore, decided, that as nothing but the name of Bhattachârya, which the members of their family bore as an honorary title, was yet unshared, this name should be divided, and one of them be called Bhatta, the other Âchârya. This anecdote 33.
is famous even to this day. The elder brother, Bhatta, lived then at Mâṭiyâri, but Âchârya chose Kuḍâligâchhi for his abode.

Rudrarâya had two wives, with the elder of whom he begot two sons, the princes Râmachandra and Râmajivana, and with the younger prince Rāmakṛishṇa. Of these, prince Rāmachandra being extremely vigorous like another Bhīmasena, and a great eater, stood in consequence of his fondness for athletic exercises in high favor with wrestlers. One day, having by impulse of a desire gone to the river to bathe there, as he used to do every day, and playing in the water, a stout boat of thirty two oars and manned by the same number of sailors and a helmsman approached rapidly the landing place where he was bathing. At the sight of this the prince, fastening his hip belt with his upper garment and taking a position to push back the boat, said: „Helmsman, let your sailors row the boat on with all their might; I will then with my two hands drive it back again.“ The helmsman replied anxiously: „My lord, how dare we do so? For if the vessel rushing on with great speed does any harm, I shall suffer for it in this world and the next.“ The prince answered angrily: „If you disregard my commands, I shall have you punished as you deserve. Hasten, therefore, to quicken the motion of your boat.“ Being thus ordered, the helmsman drove his boat

34. forward with great speed, and the prince, considering that it was now his duty to prevent it from striking the shore, repelled it with his hands with such force as almost to break it to pieces. The helmsman and his sailors were all petrified with astonishment (verbally: were like painted boys). Prince Rāmachandra being also a very skilful huntsman built a palace at Bhempura to rest there after the chase, and used to go thither from time to time in order to hunt. Thus, one morning, having accomplished the daily observances, as well as those appointed for such an occasion he mounted a swift horse to ride to the hunt to Bhempura, after having put on his armor, taken a mace and a sword, and selected for his train a host of servants armed with spears, darts, arrows and the like. On his way he was suddenly informed by his servants, that close to him in the midst of the forest a huge buffalo with sharp horns, which had not been remarked at a distance by reason of the fog which filled the atmosphere, was on account of its natural antipathy against the horse rushing upon the one he rode; and that therefore the latter was trembling in its gait for fear. The prince having observed the same himself alighted from his horse, and having given the bridle into the hand of a servant and taken a mace into his own, took his position in front of the buffalo, as firm as a post. The buffalo, bending down its head until its horns touched the ground, and raising a cloud of dust like a whirlwind by its continual wrathful snorting, came rushing furiously upon the prince. So soon as it was in reach, the prince having seized its horns with both his hands flung the beast far from him, and just as it was getting up upon its hind-feet after its fall, killed it with one powerful stroke of his mace. Then having torn out its two horns with his hands he went home. This story being famous everywhere and with everybody, some time after there came from various countries young wrestlers who having heard the story wished to wrestle with Râmachandra; but surprised by the sight of his body and his dexterity gave up their desire and desisted from the trial, praising the prince as a wonderful man and an incarnation of some god. Having been hospitably entertained by him they returned each to his home again. Some time being elapsed there came a high Mohammedan officer, a Faujdâr (¹⁵) as it is called in Persian, who being gifted with great strength and skilled in athletic contests had come to wrestle with our prince. After his arrival prince Râmachandra informed his father of it, saying: „Your Majesty, a high Mohammedan officer has arrived to wrestle with me; as your Majesty commands, so it shall be done.“ Rudrarâya replied: „A house must be prepared for the Mohammedan officer to live in, and delicacies for his food. But how may we wrestle with a Mohammedan? If he wish to witness your strength, you may exhibit it to him. Go also to his lodging to pay him hospitable attention and entertain him with conversation.“ When the next morning Râmachandra had repaired to the Mohammedan officer and gone through the usual ceremonies of mutual salutation, he was informed by the latter of his desire as follows:

36. „I wished to wrestle with you since you are a great hero and a skilful wrestler, and I too am practised in the same art. Now let me know your opinion.“ The prince replied with a reverence: „You are employed by my superior in a high office, and therefore always an object of my veneration. We princes are to be admonished by you to what is proper; I will act, therefore, as it shall please you who are judge of what is becoming or unbecoming.“ The Mohammedan being highly pleased with these words answered: „You are superior to me, O prince, not only in strength, but also in judgement. We, therefore, will not wrestle together, but I will rather witness what you can do.“ The prince consented, and having taken hold with both hands of a mango tree of four or five years growth and full of branches and boughs, which was standing before the Mohammedan, tore it up with a single effort. The Mohammedan and his retinue said to each other: a man of such exceeding power we have never yet seen nor heard of; the prince has given us here an exhibition of superhuman strength. After these and similar praises the Mohammedan went home satisfied in a high degree.

- When after a short time Râmachandra came to Jâmbhâgîra, he was celebrated there by everybody under the name of the strong man and the mighty eater. Hearing of this, Nandalâla, a minister of the Amîr al Umarâ (16*) appointed over Jâmbhâgîra, who himself managed the concerns of the realm, saluting Râmachandra said to him, that he wished to witness 37. his appetite and his vigor. But Râmachandra replied: „How is it possible that you should see my appetite when I am not permitted to eat near a Çûdra?“ Nandalâla answered: „After having put on a white garment, taken a bath and observed the other rites I only wished to see it from afar off.“ But Râmachandra said: „After all these ceremonies you are nothing but a Çûdra; why then should you purpose it? But if you wish to witness my vigor, what prevents you from doing so? If you are desirous to see it, I will show you my power." The next day Râmachandra having gone to Nandalâla, the latter said: „I have bought a very swift and strong horse for 800 pieces to ride upon; this I wished to have mounted by you." Râmachandra replied: „I am wont to ride a horse belonging to the famous race of Balkh and Turkistân; but this is a horse of low race and without strength; as soon as mounted by me, it will instantly die. It is, therefore, not proper that I should mount it." But Nandalâla said: „If this horse dies on account of your mounting it, let it die. My desire to see the spectacle is great, while if it dies the loss is not great. Ride it therefore with all vigor." Although Râmachandra again and again endeavored to dissuade him from uselessly killing the horse, he had it made ready and produced it before Râmachandra. Upon this the latter said anew: „Magnanimous lord, if I mount the horse from a low position, the violence of my leap will instantly break its hip. I will, therefore, place myself on a 38. somewhat elevated part of your palace and mount the horse as it stands below me." This proposal having been approved by Nandalâla, Râmachandra mounted the horse. But when, having rode a little way, he pressed it with his heels and legs for the sake of quickening its progress, it fell down and died, all its bones on both sides breaking with a crashing noise ⁽¹⁶⁾. All who saw this spectacle were astounded and extolled Râmachandra as a demigod. One day Râmachandra lifting up with his hand a great pillar of wood in the building where Nandalâla lived, which was strongly built in with bricks above and below, put under it a pocket handkerchief he had noticed in the hand of a servant, saying to all the youth: „I wonder if you are able to pull this cloth out again." Thus addressed all stood silent, deliberating on the possibility of what he demanded to be done. Seeing them in this embarrassment he lifted the pillar with both his arms, and breaking the flat roof of the palace (¹⁷) drew out the cloth. At sight of this all were struck dumb with surprise. Some days after this, Nandalāla wishing to witness the appetite of Rāmachandra caused a relation of the latter's to boil for him in his own garden a great store of fish, meat and other eatables; Nandalāla when he saw the quantity, was astonished. Similar proofs of his power Rāmachandra gave in many other ways.

39. In consequence of his being occupied with such exploits he did not pay his daily veneration to the gods, and was unable (¹⁸) to converse with the Pandits; while his father Rudrarāya was on account of his ever exemplary life celebrated under the name of Rudrarishi (i. e. Rudra the holy sage). Thus Rāmachandra being not obedient to his father was not much beloved by him; Rudrarāya, therefore, did not transmit the kingdom to him, but, either with the intention of giving the kingdom to another of his sons, or in order to influence Rāmachandra, by the fear of losing it, to behave himself in a manner agreeable to him, wrote to the Sultan of Delhi, requesting, the latter might give orders, that to whomsoever of his sons he should give his kingdom, the same should be established in it. The Sultan of Delhi having assented informed Rudrarāya of his permission by a letter of reply. Having after the reception of this autograph letter from the Sultan ruled happily for some time longer over his kingdom, he fell sick; on which account wishing to see the Bhāgrathī he repaired to Sukhasāgara; but being cured there by the physicians and his sickness checked, he went home to Kṛishṇanagara, where he arranged with great pomp the grand autumnal feast. Yet his sickness increasing he went back again to Sukhasāgara, having procured previously the whole apparatus necessary for the performance of his funeral ceremonies, and collected great sums of money in order to satisfy with presents the invited Brahmans. Then feeling his end near, he distributed gold pieces, land, garments and food very liberally among the Brahmans, and said to his sons and followers: „I have previously procured all things necessary for my funeral, and the time of my death is near; only a boat which I have sent to the country of Hugly to fetch sandal wood for my concretion, has not yet arrived. If it delay yet longer, I shall not see it, nor be burned with it, and this is causing me great sorrow." As he said this, the host of servants standing before him informed him, that the boat loaded with that burden of wood had just arrived. He then said in presence of all his ministers and sons: „Prince Râmachandra is not obedient to me, nor does he find his delight in protecting his subjects; prince Râmajivana, on the contrary, is anxious for the love of his subjects and devoted to me; I, therefore, anoint him king." And with these words he instantly anointed him. Upon this prince Râmachandra said to his father: „Your Majesty, what means of subsistence will remain to me your servant?" Rudrarâya replied: „I shall provide for your sustenance by your brother." „Râmajivana always had a hatred against me", said Râmachandra, „he never will take care of me." „But if I order it, he will do so", replied Rudrarâya; upon which Râmachandra replied again: „I, Râmachandra, will always submit to the arrangements of my father; but if Râmajivana do not take care of me, I shall know how to find my sustenance." With these words he was silent. After a time Rudrarâya died and attained the state of eternal happiness, his body lying half on the bank and half in the water of the Bhâgirathî, and his mind employed in meditating on the names of Râma.

His sons and his ministers having then burned him with sandal wood and clarified butter, and presented the obsequial cakes to his manes, went home to Krishnanagara, their hearts perplexed with grief. Having respectfully invited thither the Pandits of Anga, Vanga, Magadha, Saurâshtra, Kâçi, Kânchî and yet other districts, together with the kings, princes and ministers of the same countries, (Râmajivana) erected a building filled with hundreds upon hundreds of dishes with eatables of all kinds (¹⁹), and employed there faithful and pleasant spoken servants to furnish ever to the Brahmans and the others who might come thither rich food to appease their appetite. Further, for the lodgement of the Brahmans who should arrive, he built toward each of the four quarters of heaven from Kṛishṇanagara a camp extending for a kroṣa (1½ mile), and able to accomodate thousands upon thousands; there too he established a store of various provisions. To the Brahmans then, who on their arrival from various countries had been received by his brothers with expressions of esteem, he assigned their lodgements in the previously erected buildings; and also the Brahmans and other persons who had come, attracted by the mere rumor of the burial, he entertained with all kinds of eatables. Ten days having been filled up with the numerous ceremonies, upon the eleventh the three brothers distributed among the Brahmans garments, ornaments and vessels of silver, brass, copper, bronze and the like, for their father's sake.

A certain collection of gifts, to the number of sixteen, land being the first among them, is generally known as „the sixteen“: these, sixteen times repeated, constitute what is termed a gift-ocean. (19a.) Of these so called gift-oceans there were distributed twenty one, viz. sixteen consisting of bronze vessels, four of silver, and one of gold; further there were given many presents of elephants, horses, boats, hammocks and the like, as well as of bulls, each of which was coupled together with four kine; more than one hundred thousand persons too were fed to their fill. In short, whoever came was satisfied, as it was at the sacrifice of Yudhishtira.

When after this the three brothers had taken their places in the midst of the Pandits and princes, who, having been seated in the assembly upon carpets and couches for the purpose of receiving the customary honor of audience, saluted them as they entered by rising from their seats, prince Rāmachandra addressed himself to all who were present, with these words: „Before you, by whose presence this assembly is rendered glorious like a council of gods, I wish to lay an affair of mine;

be pleased to hear it. My father laid upon me this injunction: you shall be cared for by Rāmajivana, but the kingdom shall go to the latter. Now, if my brother actually does make provision for me, this order of my father shall never be transgressed by me. Let him then declare in this assembly in your presence, in what way he will make me this provision; you shall be witnesses thereof." As upon these words Rāmajivana remained silent, Rāmachandra began anew: "My brother declines to reply; I, therefore, must myself fix the conditions of our agreement in regard to my provision. Māṭiyāri and sundry other villages subject to the king with the obligation of paying him an annual tribute shall pass into my possession; further ten thousand silver coins, four horses for my driving, and, as I am fond of fish, the pond called Poyāladaha shall be given to me, the latter free from taxation. This is the way in which my brother shall take care of me." Upon this all who were sitting in the assembly, cried: "His Highness prince Rāmachandra has spoken well; this his Highness prince Rāmajivana certainly ought to do." Rāmajivana, however, did not consent, but said: "How can your Highness make such a proposal? In the same way as you have been supported by my father, you shall also be supported by me. But how can you lay claim to the possession of Māṭiyāri and the other villages and to all those things you demand?" By these words the heart of Rāmachandra being moved to anger, he called to witness all who were present, went to his stable, mounted that excellent horse of his which was able to bear him, bade all his servants accompany him, and departed instantly for the capital Hugly. But Rāmajivana being informed of the whole matter, ordered a number of soldiers to bring him back; yet as soon as they had come within sight of him, and been looked at by him with an eye red with wrath, they fled away. Having arrived at Hugly, Rāmachandra related the whole matter to the Faujdār residing there.

In the meanwhile Rāmajivana having after a splendid

- entertainment dismissed the invited Brahmans and other guests became anxious, and ruled over his kingdom without tranquillity, while the Faujdâr of Hugly, being much pleased with the heroic qualities of Râmachandra, reported by letter the affair of the two brothers to the governor of Jâmhâgîra; and having received an answer with the latter's own signature, conferring upon
44. Râmachandra the government over his paternal kingdom, dismissed the latter to his own country which was now made over into his own possession. Râmachandra then went to his residence at Çrînagara and began to conduct the government of the realm. But Râmajîvana having collected a great army to fight against his brother, they now and then gave battle to each other. Yet as during the following three years which were thus filled up with war, Râmajîvana repeatedly sent tribute to the Mohammedan governor, he succeeded in retaining his paternal kingdom, while Râmachandra obtained for a season the sway over some villages. After some time Râmajîvana having by some stratagem taken Râmachandra prisoner, and sent him secretly to Jâmhâgîra (²⁰), remained himself in possession of the whole and undivided kingdom. But as he never went to pay his respects to the governor of Jâmhâgîra, and also neglected to pay in full the stipulated tribute, the governor being much irritated by this conduct sent an ambassador, called prince Râdhâvallabha, to the court of Râmajîvana with the commission to call in both the arrears of the former tribute and the whole amount now to be paid, and to explore at the same time, how much revenue Râmajîvana received from his kingdom.

When a few days after the arrival of Râdhâvallabha a very vehement and even violent strife arose between them in consequence of a quarrel which had taken place between their servants on occasion of the delivery of the tribute, Râdhâvallabha, suppressing his excessive wrath, reported by letter to the governor of Jâmhâgîra the great baseness of Râmajîvana and his opposition to paying the tribute justly demanded from him, and at the same time the excellence of his younger brother Rāmakṛishṇa. Having received upon this a letter with the governor's own signature, to the effect that he should take Rāmajivana prisoner and give the kingdom to Rāmakṛishṇa, he occupied himself with the latter's installation into the government. 45.

At this time it happened, that the capital of Çobhâsīṃha, king of Chetuyâ, was plundered by Kṛishṇarâma, king of Vardhamâna, whose country was not far from that of Çobhâsīṃha. But soon Çobhâsīṃha, greatly enraged at this attack, marching through a forest by a road unknown to the inhabitants of Vardhamâna, passed the river Dâmodara, on the bank of which Vardhamâna lies, and took up a position before the latter city. Prince Kṛishṇarâma then observing the advance of the hostile army, and perceiving that he was doomed to perish with his followers, as no expedient of escape from the enemy appeared, all opportunity to flee being taken from him, and preparation for a war not having been made, in consequence of this reflection caused his son, Çrijagadrâma, to put on female apparel, and to seat himself upon a car for women, and sent him, undetected by the hostile army, to the court of Rāmakṛishṇa at Kṛishṇanagara. Considering further, that it would be a great disgrace for his retinue⁽²¹⁾ to fall into the hands of the enemy, he rather put them to death with his own hand. After this Çobhâsīṃha having arrived with his army and slain Kṛishṇarâma as the latter had his retinue, overflowed Vardhamâna; but Jagadrâma, who had fled, was kept concealed by Rāmakṛishṇa in the province of Mâṭiyâri. Meanwhile Çobhâsīṃha extended his power all over Vardhamâna, the rest of Kṛishṇarâma's followers, who were yet alive, having fled. At this time Sīṃha having seen a very beautiful daughter of Kṛishṇarâma who by some chance had escaped death, and fallen in love with her, began to keep her as his mistress. And in spite of the admonitions of his counsellors, to the effect that he should not inconsiderately enjoy one who belonged to 46.

the party of his enemies, until, after having overcome his adversaries and firmly established his authority over Vardhamāna, he might enjoy her with security, he yet persisted in his imprudence. And having got proud of his conquest of Vardhamāna he sent generals against many royal cities, to destroy the power which the Sultan of Delhi possessed in Vanga and the adjacent countries. He also generally succeeded in overcoming the little princes. But Aurengzeb, Sultan of Delhi, who was engaged just at this time in a war against enemies in the southern district (i. e. the English), having been informed by a letter from his resident in that quarter of the conquest of Vardhamāna and all the evil-doings of Çobhâsīmha, sent his well beloved grandson, Azim-us-shân, with many generals, to destroy Çobhâsīmha. After some time the grandson of the Sultan of Delhi being advanced as far as Murshedabad, Çobhâsīmha was killed, when in a state of drunkenness, by the daughter of Kṛishṇarāma, who having gone to bed with him ripped up his belly with a small but sharp-edged knife which she had hidden in her luxuriant hair; he obtained after death the fate his deeds deserved.

47. Upon this Hemmatasīmha, the younger brother of Çobhâsīmha, having after no long time ceased his mourning, came with a great army to Vardhamāna, and began to behave in the same way as his brother had done. In order also to subject Râmakrishṇa, king of Navadvîpa, to his power, he sent out many generals, but Râmakrishṇa with but a small number of soldiers, who, however, had a powerful protection in the circumstance that their thoughts were directed upon the supreme deity, rooted out the generals of Çobhâsīmha as if they had been mere tufts of grass. At this very time the grandson of the Sultan of Delhi having come himself from Murshedabad to Palâçi, while the vanguard of his army was arrived already at the village of Kâṭnyâm, there arose there a very violent battle between the two armies, and of each party great numbers fell. Neamet Khân, a Mohammedan, and general of Sīmha, had taught an elephant of his own, when attacked by hostile soldiers, to rush about holding in its outstretched trunk a broad and sharp sword, and to kill with it as if in sport ten or twelve persons. As this elephant, by such attacks repeatedly killing numbers of soldiers both with its sword and by trampling them with its feet, put the Delhian army into confusion, the latter was obliged to retreat for some distance. But soon the grandson of the Sultan of Delhi having heard these news from his messengers, hastened from Palāṇi to his army, and by means of fire-arms, called jeḷāla (²²), caused a great destruction in the army of Hemmatasīpha: many horsemen of the latter's also were killed by the Delhian cavalry. The army of Sīṃha finding itself in consequence of this in great confusion, great numbers of his soldiers were also put to death by the enemy in various ways by means of swords, darts, mallets and arrows. Upon this sight Sīṃha ran away afoot and repaired to some (hidden) place. Thenceforth the Delhian soldiers raised their cries of victory and elevating the flag of conquest congratulated their lord by the sound of drums. 48.

As the grandson of the Sultan of Delhi stayed for some time longer to regulate the affairs of the government over Vardhamāna, Gauḍa, and the adjacent countries, all kings came to wait upon him, reverencing him with folded hands, having put off the hems of their garments, laid aside their golden ornaments, and offering gifts of wealth and the like. While the others, not daring to show their wealth, left their trains at home and appeared only with a few followers, Rāmakṛishṇa came surrounded by a stately retinue. At sight of these princes with their small trains the grandson of the Sultan of Delhi said with a disdainful gesture to his followers: „These are no princes, but offsprings of low families; else they would not have such retinues. But prince Rāmakṛishṇa is the offspring of a great family, for he alone has a stately retinue comparable to my own; he himself too appears like a second Kandarpa and shines before one like the sun, and is like Vṛihaspati in his speech; he is surrounded by numerous soldiers, waited upon by hosts of ministers, who themselves are honored by retinues in splendid carriages. Thus he is a man gladdening the eyes of such persons as I am, and certainly the first among the princes of Gauda and these other countries." Then,

49. Rāmakṛishṇa having according to custom offered his salutation and paid his respect, the grandson of the Sultan of Delli addressed to him many obliging words. Then, just at that time, Rājadhīra the nephew of Jayasīṃha Deva, being his sister's son, the commander of a body of twenty two thousand horsemen and an eminent general, having arrived, a verbal dispute arose between the latter and Rāmakṛishṇa, in consequence of which they frequently committed acts of violence against one another. The grandson of the Sultan having heard this affair from his spies, endeavored in sight of the whole army to compose their difference, and having called them both before him reconciled them, appeasing their anger by persuasive words; then he put the finishing upon their friendship by causing them to exchange turbans. They, on their part, lived for some time in great mutual affection, paying visits to each other and offering and returning various presents. Rāmakṛishṇa kept also in pay to execute his orders three thousand horsemen mounted on horses of excellent race, seven thousand soldiers with fire-arms, and thousands of foot-soldiers with bows. After a time the grandson of the Sultan expressed to Rāmakṛishṇa the high pleasure which he had derived from long intercourse with him and acquaintance with his in all respects excellent character, by granting to him whatever favor he wished, and having gone to Jāṃhāgīra, where he resided for a time, made known by letter to his grandfather the excellency of Rāmakṛishṇa in every respect, while the latter after the entire destruction of the army of Çobhāsīṃha's
50. younger brother, who had fled, made his entrance into Kṛishṇanagara amid cries of victory and thank-offerings.

Jagatseta and the other (bankers who were the) creditors of all princes, being in possession of the favor of Rāmakṛishṇa (23) were entertained by the latter at Kṛishṇanagara in a hall built of bricks in the outward open court yard (of his palace); and having lived there for one month, richly supplied with all provisions, they went back to their own houses, highly contented and under mutual assurances of regard.

Thus Rāmakṛishṇa lived happily at Kṛishṇanagara for a long time, and any matter of interest of which he gave notice to the grandson of the Sultan of Delhi who resided at Jāṃhāgīra, was executed without fail by the latter, who scarcely having got notice of it gave his instructions in a letter of answer. Rāmakṛishṇa lived also in friendship with Vāḍa Sāheb, who at that time was governor of the southern foreigners (i. e. the English) in Calcutta; the latter, therefore, showed likewise continual friendship towards him, and placed a garrison of 2500 so called „soldiers“, who were skilled in the use of all kinds of weapons and missiles, in Kṛishṇanagara to execute the plans of Rāmakṛishṇa.

While he thus governed his realm with great ability, a violent difference arose between him and the sovereign prince of Yaçohara, on account of the boundary of some of their villages. Rāmakṛishṇa, therefore, marched with a great army towards the city of Yaçohara, and having vanquished its sovereign and plundered his city, excited great apprehension in the minds of the other princes, who, perplexed with fear, employed ambassadors at the court of Rāmakṛishṇa to inform them daily of what each of them ought to know in order to satisfy Rāmakṛishṇa. Whatever Rāmakṛishṇa wrote to the grandson of the Sultan of Delhi to request, was without reserve granted by a letter with the latter's own signature; so that a Mohammedan called Jāfar Khān, who was appointed over Jāṃhāgīra by the Sultan of Delhi, was not able to do him any harm, although he continually endeavored to do so, and was obliged to be content with the tribute which Rāmakṛishṇa of his own pleasure gave him; the stipulated tribute, therefore, he was never able to obtain. Thus after a government of eleven years, having paid but very little of what he was under obligation to pay, while the greater part remained in arrear, he was with great pains allured to Jāṃbhāgīra and there by treachery, with aid of the formerly imprisoned Rāmājīvana, was closely confined. In the prison he died after some time of smallpox. Upon news of this the grandson of the Sultan was very much distressed and troubled with sorrow. After a time Jāfar Khān reported to the grandson of the Sultan: Rāmākṛishṇa being dead, to whom is the government over Navadvīpa now to be committed? He answered: If there be a son, a fosterson, a grandson or any such relation of Rāmākṛishṇa, commit it to him. Jāfar Khān replying, that there was no such relation, the grandson of the Sultan ordered: Then give it to any minister of Rāmākṛishṇa, who is fit for the government, and who will protect the wife and family of Rāmākṛishṇa. Jāfar Khān replied: Your Highness, there is

52. also no such minister; Rāmākṛishṇa's elder brother, however, prince Rāmājīvana, lives in prison here. If you command, I will commit the kingdom to him. The decision of the grandson of the Sultan then was: If there is no other descendant of Rāmākṛishṇa fit for the government, you must of course give the kingdom to his elder brother, prince Rāmājīvana. Having got this order, Jāfar Khān appointed the latter over the kingdom of Navadvīpa, and having greatly honored him with donatives of carriages, ornaments, clothes and the like, established him in his government. Rāmājīvana on his part, having made the necessary arrangements and taken leave after an audience, arrived at home and governed his realm in accordance with law. As he was well skilled in the sciences of poetry, singing and acting, showed many particular virtues, and was clever in managing the affairs of the government, he gained the favor of his subjects.

His son, prince Raghurāma, by his mercy, his richness in virtues, his magnificence and his readiness in assisting others, acquiring the affection of the people while his father was yet alive, was without interruption the object of the latter's tenderness, and extended the glory becoming to his race. He was also a hero and a very skilful archer. At this time it happened that all kings having been one after another taken prisoners by Jâfar Khân, governor of Murshedabad, by the employment of treachery, Raghurâma was present there in the city to attend upon his father who was likewise in prison. Just then the governor sent a general called Lâharimalla with a great army against Udayarâya, king of Râjasâi, who in consequence of a quarrel with the governor had taken his position with a considerable force near the village Vîrakâti. By the advice of Râmajivana he gave with many expressions of respect 53. as attendant to Malla, to watch over him, the prince Raghurâma, who was skilled in counsel, highly courageous, and a master of the art of archery. Some days after this the two armies of Lâharimalla and Udayarâya had come almost in sight of each other, when Ali Mahmud, the son of Ghulâm Mahmud, the first general of Udayarâya, a very young man, but skilful in war, came on horseback, carrying in his hands a sharp sword and a shield, and accompanied by nineteen soldiers with chariots and wearing ornaments, weapons and missiles, to fall upon Lâharimalla, who by some chance being some distance removed from the bulk of his army, was taking counsel with Raghurâma, accompanied by no more than five or six attendants. At sight of this Lâharimalla said to Raghurâma: „Oh my prince, our soldiers are far away, and the enemy are close upon us. What then is to be done? For we are too weak to contend with success against their power.“ The prince replied: „Oh magnanimous Lâharimalla, it is disgraceful to fly in battle; for if you fly, your soldiers will certainly suffer a defeat, and if they are defeated, it will go hard with us whether we fall into the hands of the enemy or of Jâfar Khân. Therefore, let firmness be your stay in this combat; three or four men, although with uplifted arms, shall

- quickly be slain by me, and then, no doubt, the other enemies too shall be overcome." While they were talking thus, not far from them the son of Ghulâm Mahmud spurred on his horse, and with his sharp sword drawn out of its sheath came rushing, like Death himself, upon Lâharimalla, who although with his eye fixed upon the foe, slowly retired backwards, and said to the prince: „Raghurâma, the enemy is near, why does not your Grace even yet endeavor to oppose him?" The prince replied: „Be tranquil; fear not; I will manage it; when the enemy comes nearer, you shall see!" Upon these words Malla with confused senses and almost clinging to the prince, and hiding himself behind his back, was scarcely able to maintain himself (upon his horse). But Raghurâma, with a sharp arrow which he drew back to his ear and shot from his circularly curved bow, pierced the son of Ghulâm Mahmud, who meanwhile having come nearer excited the fear of Malla's retinue. The arrow even after passing through his breast, which was covered with an iron mailcoat, flew away a considerable distance farther. Âli Mahmud, his heart being pierced by the arrow of Raghurâma, fell from the back of his horse with expressions of praise: such as, that he had never yet seen in the many battles he had witnessed a youth of equal strength and skill in archery, and then said: „Oh great prince, a burning thirst vexes me; but as all my retinue have fled as soon as they saw the effect of your arrow, give me some water to drink." The compassionate prince gave him sweet water and having thus revived him said: „Great hero, you shall accompany us to our army, and there you shall be cured by the art of physicians. If you have any
54. other desire ⁽²⁴⁾ utter it!" He replied: „Oh prince, why do you speak thus? By the stroke of your arrow my life is brought to its end; and it is no sorrow for me to die in battle by the hand of a most valiant hero. So long as the breath remains in my body, I beseech you to stand before me, who have been abandoned by my friends." The prince bedewed him with the rain of his falling tears and endeavored together with his retinue to encourage him. But after a time he died and obtained such a felicity as he merited. Then the bulk of the army, which had come near meanwhile, having raised cries of victory, Lâharimalla who now had regained his courage, paid by true reports high praise to Raghurâma, and shewed him honor together with his army. He then marched to Murshedabad, the flag of victory elevated, and there reported the heroism of Raghurâma, his firmness in battle and his dexterity in counsel to Jâfar Khân, who expressed to the prince his high satisfaction by such words as: how should one be astonished at Raghurâma's heroism, since he is of such an eminent family! Râmajîvana too, highly pleased, rejoiced Raghurâma with his blessings. Thus the latter's exploits, worthy to be admired by everybody, have been sung by men down to this day. In consequence of this the governor having shown honors to Râmajîvana sent them home.

In the çakayear 1632 (= A. D. 1710) a son was born to Raghurâma at the time of constellation of all friendly planets, and of the auspicious rise of the star (that governed the year), the source of a shoreless ocean of joy to his father and grandfather, the cause of great rejoicing to their subjects, and endowed with an exceedingly handsome body. After his birth the astronomers assembled, and having deliberated on the rise (of the planets) at the time of his birth, announced 56. to his father and grandfather, that this child was to become endowed with manifold virtues. The king having honored them with presents of carriages, garments and ornaments of various sorts sent them home. Then there came in hosts both native and foreign Brahmans from all quarters, to see the young prince, and to wish him continual freedom from sickness and grief, richness in virtues, and a long life⁽²⁵⁾. The king having hospitably entertained these Brahmans dismissed them. When the child had reached an age of six months, the king, at a time when the astronomers had announced

- to him the auspicious rise (of the planets), wishing to celebrate the ceremonies of giving him his name and of feeding him with rice for the first time, invited the kings, princes and Brahmans, who found their pleasure in penance and prayer, from Anga, Vanga, Kalinga, Kâçî, Kâuçî and the adjacent countries. For their dwelling he built a camp of one kroça in length and half a kroça in breadth, which was constructed of cloth and the like, resplendent with ranges of various palaces, adorned with rows of white, blue, yellow and other flags and surrounded by a fence likewise of cloth and such materials. There he deposited stores of daintiest provisions, and appointed a number of ministers to care for the entertainment of the assembled princes and Brahmans. And also
57. for those of various castes, who had come without being invited to witness the feast, were provided stores of various and abundant provisions; there were many streams of curdled and fresh milk, clarified butter, honey and the like, and innumerable heaps of beans, peas, bilobes (?) and similar fruits; and the piles of rice and such things, how could they be counted? Then the day before the ceremony, having led the assembled Brahmans and princes with suitable demonstrations of reverence into the erected dwelling-place, he entertained them with his provisions; the next day when they were sitting in the assembly, he began the ceremony at the auspicious rise (of the planets) as announced by the astronomers. Then 58. commenced a feast, at whose noise and splendor the earth was so astonished, that she did not know what to make of it⁽²⁶⁾. After this the hosts of Brahmans and princes, satisfied with presents and honors, rejoiced the child with prayers for his happiness, such as, that he might rule over the earth for a long time, endowed with manifold virtues and free from troubles; that in whatever he wished to perform, the highest goddess might give him success, and more the like. Then, the Brahmans and the others having gone home, and after the performance of the rites supplementary to the ceremony of giving the child rice for the first time, Rāmajivana was summoned by a minister of Jāfar Khān to Murshedabad, on account of the tribute to be paid by him; and there he died after a time and obtained the highest felicity, having reigned over his kingdom for ten years.

After him his son, called Raghurāma, whose excellence has already been glorified, became a king like Raghu himself. Under his government the people was exceedingly rich with prosperity; there was no second person like him in affability, justice and majesty. Possessing the favor of the gods and the Brahmans he governed the kingdom for two years at Kṛishṇanagara. But Jāfar Khān, who had already previously subdued the other kings, now at last captured also Raghurāma and kept him in confinement at Murshedabad. Yet, although imprisoned, he was wont generally every day, whether solicited or not, to distribute land to Brahmans to gain their subsistence from it, and whatever any one asked from him, he was sure to obtain. Thus he governed even in prison the country which had no other lord, for eleven years wanting four months. Some time after this having returned from Murshedabad to Kṛishṇanagara he ruled yet over the realm for 59. four months. Under his government poverty was nowhere to be found among the Brahmans, nor the least injustice among his subjects; his friends were plunged in an ocean of prosperity, and his ministers were addicted to sacrifices and holy rites. Then having himself observed sacrifices and the other rites he expired, after a government of thirteen years, on the bank of the Bhāgrathī, in the çaka-year 1650 (= A.D. 1728), and obtained the highest felicity.

The same year the ministers anointed as king, according to the order of the governor of Murshedabad, Çrīkṛishṇachandra, the son of Raghurāma, a man possessed of a treasure of many virtues.

NOTES.

¹⁾ This introductory strophe is written in the Sragdhara metre, which is frequent in dramatical poetry and consists of two hemistichs each of which is again divided into two parts. The scheme of one such part is:

----- || o o o o o o o o o o || ----- |

The most natural translation of the third line, according to the position of words, is that here given; the sense would become better however, if na could be taken with the verb labhante: how should they not obtain fame in the threefold world, who extol great renown? I do not precisely know if the latter translation is admissible.

²⁾ The original calls the garments of these Brahmans sũchĩ-viddha, a word which is not explained either in Wilson's or in Haughton's dictionary. It properly means „needle-sewed“, which yet seems to have such a signification as the one proposed in the translation; for a „needle-sewed“ dress seems to have been particularly luxurious, and therefore unbecoming to a Brahman, as appears partly from our passage, for on account of their luxurious and little ascetic appearance the king disregarded them, partly from another passage, 32, 2 sq. The relation in the Çabdakalpadruma (see note 4) makes the Brahmans appear in a warrior-like apparel, and thus excite distrust of their capability in the heart of the king.

³⁾ The villages offered to Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa by the king are, together with their contents, called in the original dush-pratigraha, i. e. an improper present for Brahmans; why, I do not know. In the Çabdakalpadruma I find indeed in the article „pratigraha“ (Vol. III p. 2338) the following notice: rājādītaḥ pratigrahanishedho, yathā:

na rājñāḥ pratigrihṣyān na 'cūdrapatitād api |
na chānyasmād aṣaktaḥ cha ninditān varjayed budhaḥ ||
iti kaurme uparibhāge 15 adhyāyaḥ ||

Yet the sense of this passage is not at all clear, and in an old and good manuscript of the Kūmapurāṇa (Chamb. 244^a), in which I sought for it in the hope, that it might perhaps receive light from the connexion in which it stands, I have not found it at all in the chapter quoted (fol. 116^a—118^b). Our passage becomes yet more striking, as it is repeatedly mentioned in the course of the narrative, that grants of land were made to Brahmins by the kings of Navadvīpa (for such they were, though Brahmins at the same time), and accepted by the former without scruple (see 39, 18. 58, 19), and only a few lines before it is related, that the same five Kānyakubjan Brahmins had accepted already five villages presented to them by king Ādistūra. Perhaps one might, by dropping the technical sense of pratigraha, translate: I can not accept your villages without your receiving something in return. Yet this explanation is somewhat ambiguous, since the whole connexion seems to demand that pratigraha should be taken in its usual technical sense.

4) The whole content of this first chapter is related also in several other works, of which we mention first those from which extracts are given in the Çabdakalpadrūma under the article „kāyastha“ (Vol. I p. 542). The first book cited and extracted there is the Dakṣiṇarāḍhīyaghaṭakakārikā; to afford a view of the content of the extract communicated, we shall give the superscriptions of the single chapters. They are: atha Ādiçūrārājapraçamsā: (among other things here is said, that Ādiçūra expelled the Buddhists from his realm, Gaur) — athādiçūrasya pātraṃ — atha Vīrasimhaṃ prati lipipreraṇaṃ — atha lipiprakāraḥ — atha brāhmaṇaçūdrāṇāṃ Gaṇḍadeçe gamanechchā — athādiçūrasamīpe brāhmaṇapreraṇaṃ — atha brāhmaṇāṇāṃ gamanaṃ — atha brāhmaṇāṇāṃ Gaṇḍarājyapraveço rājasamīpe āçīrathaṃ gamanaṃ cha — atha rājakartrikaṃ brâhmanânâṃ praçânt(v)anaṃ gotranâmapraçnaç cha — atha pañchabrâhmanânâṃ parichayaḥ — atha çûdraparichayapraçnaḥ — atha pañchaçûdrânâṃ praçnaḥ — athâshṭau siddhamaulikâḥ — atha dvisaptatiḥ sâdhyamaulikâḥ. — There follows now (p. 545) an extract from Râmânandaçarman's kuladipikâ, called Vangajaghaṭaka. The first chapter contains the myth of the origin and first genealogy of the Kâyasthas or writer caste, from the Agnipurâṇa. The next four chapters are merely genealogical; then follows one chapter, which, as referring to the whole story of our first chapter, we shall communicate entire; it runs thus (p. 546):

The three next and last chapters are again genealogical and consist scarcely of anything else but names; they are entitled: atha Vallālakṛitaçrenivibhāgaḥ — atha Vangajakāyasthaçreninirṇayaḥ — atha Vangajakulīnādinirṇapaṇam. —

Another mention of our story, but only occasionally and likewise for the purpose of showing, how the Kāyasthas came to Gaur, is made in the Rājābali, written in Bengālī by Mṛityuñjaya Çarman (ed. Serampore p. 80), a work which perhaps would have afforded me yet more desirable points of comparison and explanation, had it not unfortunately come too late to my hands. In one particular the narrative given here is different from the rest, it being said, that Âdiçitra (with ç) invited those five Brahmans from Kânyakubja, which country then was ruled by a king called Vîrasimha (who is named also in the 3d chapter of the Dakṣiṇarâḍhîyaghatākakârikâ), on account of a sacrifice for obtaining rain during a drought.

Further mention of our tale is made in Colebrooke's „enumeration of Indian classes“ (As. Res. V. 64. Misc. Ess. II. 187).

In all these reports the families of these five Brahmans are mentioned (see the chapter communicated of the Vaṅgajaghatāka): Bhaṭṭanârâyana is uniformly called a descendant of the family of Çandîla, Dakṣa of that of Kaçyapa, Çriharsha of that of Bharadvāja. Vedagarbha by Colebrooke is written Vedagarva and said to be of the family of Vatsa, Chândaḍa (according to Colebrooke Chandra) of that of Savarna, while the three other reports invert the matter, attributing Vedagarbha to the family of Savarna, Chândaḍa to that of Vatsa. — Respecting the orthography of the name of Âdisîtra see the Index.

⁵⁾ Although the names given here for the sons of Bhaṭṭanârâyana may look rather unbrahmanical, yet the compound word, in which they are given, must be thus divided to get the required number of sixteen. We may also for some of the most striking names give analogies from the last genealogical chapters of the Vaṅgajaghatāka, as communicated in the Çabdakalpadruma. There are to be found two names, Bhuñi and Puñi, which in their formation quite correspond to our Guñi, the form which is read in Ms. B, and to which we ought therefore to have given the preference instead of the Guṃñi received into the text. Further Deva and Guṇa alone are both mentioned there as names, as well as many other words, which usually occur only as parts of proper names, e. g. Datta, Dâsa, Sena, Kara, Chandra, Dhara, Çarman etc. Besides there are to be found there many names, which are no less remarkable in their formation than ours, as Âicha, Hui, Khâma, Roi, and others.

⁹⁾ Our text writes kânagoi = Pers. قانونشکوي, the office of a قانونشکو, for which Richardson gives the following two significations: 1. an officer whose duty is to register and expound the laws of the empire. 2. an officer in each district acquainted with the customs and the nature of the tenures of the land. Haughton (s. v. kângui or kânûngô) gives only the former, Shakspear only the latter signification. — The word is mentioned again 29, 18.

⁷⁾ Our author writes majamudâra, which approaches nearer to the Persian مسجوددار, than the Bengali orthography mojumdâr. As to the signification, it is given by Richardson as: 1. one who checks, or audits the account of the revenue-collector in each district. 2. A record-keeper. Shakspear and Haughton give only the latter signification, adding: a title given to servants of a kânûngô. This modification, however, seems not to be applicable to our passage; on the contrary, the sense of the latter requires the majmuat-dâr to be superior to the kânûngô, because Durgâdâsa being not content with the title of a kânûngô was appeased by having conferred upon him that of a majmuat-dâr. — Further mention of this word is made 13, 21. 14, 7 sq.

⁸⁾ On this mode of expression see Lassen, anthologia Sanscritica p. 67 l. 14, and the note to that passage.

⁹⁾ See the note quoted in ⁸.

tion, because it is favored by the analogy of similar passages in our text. As to the phrase kim idam vichitram, the same occurs once more 55, 13, where the sense of vichitra „wonderful“ cannot be questioned, while charaṇa always means „foot“ (21, 11. 21, 13. 35, 1. 57, 14), and is even the word constantly employed in the phrase for honorifically circumscribing the second person (20, 8. 21, 2).

¹¹⁾ Both manuscripts give svavâsâdûravartyantahpuram, (having destroyed) the seraglio near his palace, but the sense requires the emendation received also into the text, of svavâsâdûravartyantahpuram, the seraglio distant from his palace.

¹²⁾ In translation the emendation of vilashanti into vilashyante was necessary, although in the text the reading of both manuscripts could not be altered, because it is very probable, that the author himself committed this fault of construction as well as the many others of which he is guilty (see the preface).

¹³⁾ kâmgura = Pers. کنگور, a pinnacle, a turret.

^{13a)} bhâra, a weight of gold.

¹⁴⁾ Respecting the two instruments çâṇi and tûṇi mentioned here among others, I have not been able to learn anything.

¹⁵⁾ phaujadâra = Pers. فوجدار, an officer of the police in Hindostan and chief magistrate of a چکلا (e. g. that of Hoogly in Bengal), who takes cognizance of all criminal matters (Richardson). See also the explicatory index of oriental expressions prefixed to Vol. I. of: The History of British India by James Mill, 4th edition, with notes and continuation by H. H. Wilson; where the following explication is given: „Foujedâr, Fojedâr, Phousdâr, Fogedâr. Under the Mogul government a magistrate of police over a large district, who took cognizance of all criminal matters within his jurisdiction, and sometimes was employed as receiver-general of the revenues.“

^{15a)} râyarâyinam, which the text gives after âmira

umarâ, seems to be a translation of this Arabic-Persian expression into some modern Indian dialect, though I do not know into which, it being neither Bengâlî nor Hindustânî.

¹⁶⁾ maḍamaḍa, a word imitating the sound of crashing bones; see Mṛichchhakatikâ ed. Stenzler 21, 23: maḍamaḍa-iṣṣam, where the Calcutta edition translates: maḍamaḍa iti kṛitvâ bhakshayishyâmi.

¹⁷⁾ Wilson's dictionary gives as the significations of chatvara only: a levelled spot for a sacrifice, a court-yard; but see Haughton under châtâla, which is a corruption of chatvara: „an inclosed plain space: a terrace, the roof of a house, a sheet of water.“

¹⁸⁾ nâçakto = na âçakto.

¹⁹⁾ The original describes those provisions more distinctly as such as are „to be chewed, sucked, licked and drunk.“ See the same expression near the end of the extract from the Bengâlî biography of Râja Kṛishnachandra, communicated in the Preface, and Râmây. I, 52, 24.

^{19a)} See Çabdakalpadrûma VI. 5677, under the article shoḍaçaḍânam:

bhûmyâsanam jalam vastram pradipo 'nnam tataḥ param |
tâmbûlachchhatragandhâç cha mâlyam phalam ataḥ param ||
çayyâ cha pâdukâ gâvaḥ kânchanam rajatam tathâ |

dânam etat shoḍaçakam pretam uddiçya diyate || tatshoḍaçakair eko dânasâgaro bhavati. — Respecting the shoḍaçamahâdânam mentioned 26, 17 I was not able to learn anything more. Perhaps it is the same, the presents being only granted in greater portions, and their order changed; for both the presents mentioned 26, 17, cattle and gold, are enumerated also as parts of the bhûmyâdishoḍaçadânam.

²⁰⁾ It is not clear, how Râmajîvana could have kept his brother confined in Jâmhâgîra, the residence of the Mohammedan governor, of whose consent to the deed no word is said, though it is unexplainable, how this could go on without his getting intelligence of it. No farther mention either is made of the imprisoned Râmachandra, so that we do not know, what became of him. The whole passage is very badly related.

²¹⁾ By parivārāḥ „retinue“ here seem to be meant the wives of Kṛṣṇarāma, for thus understood the expression gains the best sense, as it would have been a great disgrace for them to fall into the hands of the conqueror; also what is said of Kṛṣṇarāma's daughter, that she by some chance had escaped death, is probably to be referred to this slaughter which Kṛṣṇarāma caused in his Harem. The sentence ha-taṣeshakṛṣṇarāmaparivāre palāyamāne, „those of Kṛṣṇarāma's followers, who were yet alive, having fled,“ then would refer to those followers and ministers of Kṛṣṇarāma, who had escaped the sword of the victorious Çobhāsīṃha. The whole is only a new instance of our author's awkwardness and want of clearness in relating.

²³⁾ premṇābaddhāḥ; the most natural understanding of this expression seems to be the one given; yet it is not impossible also to write premṇā baddhāḥ, and to understand it thus: „they were by Raghurāma, out of care for them (to protect them from the treacherous machinations of their creditors), kept prisoners (for some time)“ etc.

²⁴⁾ ruchi seems to be used here as an adjective in the neuter gender, being usually a substantive masc. or fem. To write yathāruchi, and take the whole as an avyayibhāvā-compound, is forbidden, I think, by the construction; for then ought to be written: yathāruchi bhavān prakāṣayatu or yathāruchi bhavatā prakāṣyatām.

²⁵⁾ This passage verbally translated would run thus: Then from many sides, from the four heavenly quarters and the regions lying between them, there came Brahmans, who, having made a connexion in masses, had conceived a gradually increasing climax of desire to see (the young prince), although they were very slow in consequence of the thick sea of pleasure of their interior, which was gladdened by the splendor of the nectar of the news of the birth of the young prince, the great Indra of the earth, the magnanimous, famous already for the stability of the joy of the mass of his subjects, who were swimming in a sea of the utmost pleasure.

²⁶) Verbal translation of the description of this feast: Then the earth, being filled during four days throughout its four heavenly quarters by the recitals of the Brahmans from the Vedas; by the panegyric hymns of the minstrels, bards and singers; by the disputations of the Nyâya and Mīmāṃsâ philosophers; by musical instruments, as conchs, bells, kettle-drums, trumpets, drums and the like; by the movement of the lovely tripping feet, loaded with tingling ornaments, of the crowds of women, the mass of whom were very slow through the weight of their excessive joy; by songs, which, strengthened one by the other's accompaniment, were united with music and dances; by the loud cries: bring! eat! take! which, at times proper for serving up the food to the masses of invited or uninvited Brahmans, the crowds of servants sent forth; by the noise of the herds of all the elephants which the kings arrived had brought along; by the neighing of the numerous horses; by the lion-like roar of heroes which arose from mock-fights between them; — (the earth) perceiving this great feast of the annaprâçana of its prince in person of a gentle boy, the exploits of whom were very delightful, was highly resplendent with the utmost joy: thinking, there must be some nuptials, or even (a feast celebrated) with yet greater and happier magnificence.

Names of Persons.

Adina, a son of Bhaṭṭanârâyana 5, 9.

Anila } sons of Bhaṭṭanârâyana 5, 8.
Asântu }

Arangajeva, the famous emperor Aurengzeb of Delhi (A. D. 1657—1707); made war against the English 46, 10; sent his grandson Azim us-shân against Çobhâsimha and Hemmatasimha 46, 14.

Akabara 8, 1. i. e. Sultan Akbar of Delhi who reigned A. D. 1556—1605.

Âchârya, see Bhaṭṭâchârya.

Âjimohsâ, i. e. عظيم الشان the grandson of Aurengzeb and son of Moazim; sent by his grandfather against Çobhâsimha, and Hemmatasimha 46, 14.

Âdivarâha, a son of Bhaṭṭanârâyana 5, 7. He together with his three brothers next to him in age, Vâṭu, Vâma and Nâna, resigned the throne in favor of their fourth brother, Nipu 5, 10.

Âdisûra, King of Gaur, who invited from Kânyakubja five Brahmans, among whom was Bhaṭṭanârâyana the ancestor of the kings of Naradvîpa, to have a sacrifice performed by them 1, 6 sq.; presented and sold land to these Brahmans, from which subsequently arose the realm of Navadvîpa 4, 11. 5, 1. His name is mentioned 1, 6. 6, 14. 16, 20. Respecting the orthography of the name, it is in the Çabda-kalpadruma and in the Râjâbali always and with more probability spelled Âdiçûra (with ç). Yet, as our Mss. give without variation Âdisûra, I thought it necessary to retain this orthography. D. twice seems to have corrected s from ç, while B. has always quite distinctly s. Colebrooke, in the treatise quoted in note 4, writes in the As. Res. Ādisūra, while in the Misc. Essays the name is altered to Ādiçvara. — Mention of this king is made also in Ritter's Erdkunde von Asien IV, 2. p. 1118. 1195. 1244.

Ālāvakhāṣa, an architect whom Rudrarāya took with him from Jāṇhāgīra, to have erected by him various buildings 30, 13.

Ālimāmuda = علي محمد بن علي, the son of Ghulām Mahmūd (Golāmāmuda 53, 7), was killed by Raghurāma 53, 21 — 55, 6.

Udaya, king of Rājāsāi: with the assistance of Raghurāma, was overcome by Lāharimalla, the general of Jāfarkhān, 52, 17 — 55, 17.

Kāmsāri, the son and successor of Trilochana 7, 17; governed his realm for 26 years 7, 13.

Kachu, a relation of Pratāpāditya, who, his family having been destroyed by the latter, was brought up by his nurse in the Kachvī-forest, from which he obtained his name 13, 3. Then he fled to the Sultan of Delhi (13, 10), from whom he obtained after the subjection of Pratāpāditya the realm of the latter and the title Yaçoharajit, i. e. conqueror of Jessore 17, 10. 11.

Kandarpa 1. The god of love, 48, 17. — 2. The son and successor of Harihara 6, 1; reigned for 26 years 6, 2.

Kāma 1. a son of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa 5, 9. — 2. The son and successor of Tārāpati; ruled for 32 years 6, 13.

Kāçinātha, the son and successor of Shashthidāsa; reigned for 34 years 7, 20. — Having killed an elephant which was sent by the king of Tripura to Sultan Akbar of Delhi, he was made war upon by the latter, and, having been made prisoner, killed (7, 20 — 9, 21). His wife fled to Harikṛishṇa Samuddhāra 9, 21 sq.

Kṛishṇachandra, the son of Raghurāma, born Çaka year 1632 = A. D. 1710 (55, 18), and anointed as king Ç. 1650 = A. D. 1728 (59, 6. 9—11). — See the Calcutta Review XIII. 1850 p. 130 note: „Kṛiṣṇ. aspired to be a second Vikramāditya, and to make Nadiya another Ujain. He gave an immense stimulus to native literature Learned men from all parts of the country were collected at Nadiya, and supported by rich endowments granted by the Rāja, who made Nadiya as celebrated for logic as Oxford now is, the Rāja being very partial to Nyāya studies which still retain the ascendancy at Nadiya. The Rāja set an example of correct diction which encouraged the people to study Bengālī with uncommon diligence. He adhered very conscientiously to Brahmanical rites.“ — HOLLWELL (in his work quoted under „Jāfarkhān“ I. 202) says, that he possessed a tract of country of about twelve days journey, and that he was taxed at nine Lac per annum, though his revenues exceeded twenty five Lac. — On his biography written in Bengālī prose by Rājib Lochan see the Preface. — He died about the year 1780, see Weber's „Catalog der Berliner Sanskrithandschriften“ no. 894 p. 267.

Kṛiṣṇarāma, king of Varddhamāna or Burdwan; having plundered the town of Çobhāsimha, was invaded by the latter, and killed himself as well as his wives, while he committed his son Çrijagatrāma to the protection of Rāmakṛiṣṇa, 45, 4 sq.

Kṣhitiça, king of Kānyakubja, father of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa, and ancestor of the royal family, whose deeds form the subject of our work 4, 12.

Gaṇeça; his statue was erected at Navadvīpa by Raghava, 26, 4.

Guṇi, Guṇa, Guntu, three sons of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa 5, 8.

Gopāla, the second son of Durgādāsa 21, 20, divided with his younger brother Govindarāma the realm of their father 22, 16; reigned for 7 years 22, 19.

Gopīramāṇa, son of Çṛikṛiṣṇa and grandson of Durgādāsa: having gained the favor of the governor of Jāmhāgīra, by his skill in athletic exercises, obtained from the latter the deliverance of his grandfather 18, 16 — 21, 19.

Golāma Māmuda = غلام محمد, the chief general of Udaya, king of Rājasāi, in his war against Jāfarkhān 53, 7.

Govinda. Nuptials between his image and that of Lakshmi, 14, 19.

Govindarāma, the third son of Durgādāsa (21, 20), who reigned ill over the share he had obtained of the realm of his father (22, 16. 20). — 22, 20 his name is written Govindarāya, probably through a fault of writing, which would be better corrected in our text.

Chhāndaḍa, one of the four Brahmans who in the company of Bhāṭṭanārāyaṇa came to Gaur 2, 8.

Jagatseta 50, 2. See the Journal of the As. Soc. of Bengal no. CCXVII. Calcutta 1850. pg. 554 note: Jagat Set, or the banker of the world, a title he received from the court of Delhi, was a member of a Jain family, as famous for banking transactions as the Rothschild. Burke said, that their transactions were as extensive as the bank of England's. See also Hollwell I. 75.

Jagadīṣa, the third son of Rāma Samuddhāra (10, 15), who having divided with his brother their paternal realm (12, 4), resided at Kuḍālagāchhi (12, 7).

Jayasinha Deva, the uncle of Rājadhīra, 49, 3.

Jāpharakhām, جعفر خان, governor of Jāmhāgīra (51, 2); took Rāmākṛishṇa prisoner, and reinstated in the latter's place the formerly dethroned Rāmajīvāna (51, 6 — 52, 5); he was also governor of Murshedabad (52, 14); took Rāmajīvāna prisoner (52, 15); but delivered him again as reward for the services shown to him by his (Rāmajīvāna's) son, Raghurāma, in a war against Udayarāya, king of Rājasāi (52, 16 — 55, 17); took Rāmajīvāna anew prisoner (58, 8); and kept him to his death (58, 10); confined also Raghurāma for eleven years wanting four months, 58, 16. — Hollwell (interesting historical events respecting the provinces of Bengal and the empire of Indostan. London 1766. I, 152) describes his character as follows: „His name, to this day, is remembered with detestation; to fill his coffers he inflicted the most cruel punishments on the Rajahs and Zimindars, by ways and means unheard of, and unknown, but in this Eastern government. He also highly oppressed the Europeans settled in these parts; yet notwithstanding his very mal-administration, he had the address to obtain the governments over Bahar and Orissa, united with that of Bengal in his person, which ever before had been distinct and separate Nabobships; . . . he removed from Dacca to Moorshedabad." See also Mill and Wilson History of Br. Ind. III. 30. Ritter IV, 2. 1204.

Tārāpati, the son and successor of Priyankara, reigned for 47 years, 6, 12.

Trilochana, the son and successor of Subuddhi, reigned for 30 years, 7, 15.

Daksha, one of the four Brahmans who came to Gaur with Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa, 2, s. 4, s.

Durgādāsa, the eldest son of Rāma Samuddhāra, 10, 15.

Having obtained from the Sultan of Delhi the title „maj-muat-dār Bhavānanda," and held for some time the office of a kânūngō near a Mohammedan governor, he returned home and divided with his brothers their paternal realm (10, 20 — 12, 8). Then having assisted the Delhiian general Mānasinha in the conquest of king Pratāpāditya of Jessore, he obtained as reward the reinstallation into the government over Vāgoyāna „and the adjacent fourteen countries," from which his grandfather Kācīnātha had been expelled (12, 8 — 18, 7). He resided at Vallabhapura (12, 4. 18, 8) and erected palaces at Māṭiyāri and Deuliya (18, 10. 11). Afterward having been taken prisoner by the governor of Jāmhāgīra on account of some irregularity in the payment of his tribute, but delivered by his grandson Gopīramaṇa (18, 14 — 21, 19), he died after a reign of 20 years (12, 6 22, 14).

Deva, a son of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa, 5, 9.

Devi, a name of the goddess Durgā, to whom Rudrarāya erected a palace at Kṛishṇanagara, 31, 3.

Dharmāngada, the son and successor of Priyankara, 6, 10; reigned for 20 years, 6, 11.

Nandalāla, the minister of the Amīr al Umarā of Jāmhāgîra; to whom Râmachandra gave proofs of his strength (36, 17 — 38, 16), and of his mighty appetite (38, 17—21). Narahari, the son and successor of Viçvambhara, governed his realm for 27 years, 6, 5.

Narendra, the eldest son of Gopâla, who was excluded from succession, 23, 1. 2.

Nâna, a son of Bhaṭṭanârâyaṇa, 5, 8. See also Âdivarâha. Nârâyaṇa 1. a name of Viṣṇu 6, c. 9, 20. — 2. The son and successor of Narahari, ruled 24 years, 6, 7.

Nipu, the fifth son of Bhaṭṭanârâyaṇa (5, 11); succeeded his father (5, 10 sq.); and reigned for 28 years (5, 15); built a palace at Keçaragrâma (5, 16).

Neyâmatakham = نعتب خان?, the Mohammedan general of Hemmatasimha, skilled in training war-elephants 47, 11 sq.

Pârâçarya, the son of Paraçara, i. e. Vyâsa, the supposed author of the Mahâbhârata etc., 1, 3.

Pratâpâditya, king of Jessore, who, refusing to pay tribute to the Sultan of Delhi was with the aid of the majmuat-dâr Bhavânanda subdued by the Delhian general Mânasimha, and died on the march to Delhi as prisoner at Benares (12, 8 — 17, 5). — There exists a biography of this king written in Bengali, which has been printed in India*), but of which it was impossible to me to obtain a copy. Yet there is an extract from it given in the „Calcutta Review“ XIII. 1850. p. 135; there this war and the end of Pratâpâditya are mentioned with these words: „... he rebelled against Akbar. A Mussulman army was sent against him, which came as far as Sulkea, and Râja Prat. being warned by his tutelar goddess, that destruction was near, surrendered himself to the Mussulman general, and was put to death.“

Priyankara, the son and successor of Nârâyaṇa, governed his realm for 29 years, 6, 9.

Bhaṭṭa, see 1. Bhaṭṭanârâyaṇa. 2. Bhaṭṭâchârya.

Bhaṭṭanârâyaṇa 1, 5. A famous Brahman of Kânyakubja and son of Kshitîça, the king of that country (4, 12); was invited to Gaur by king Âdisûra, together with four other Brahmans (2, 7), to whom he was superior (4, 8). As lord of some land, partly presented, partly sold to him by king Âdisûra (4, 5 sq.), over which he ruled for 24 years (5, 3), he became the ancestor of the kings of Navadvîpa. He is called only Bhaṭṭa 2, 6. 4, 4 sq.

Bhaṭṭāchārya the surname of a Brahman family, which by Rudrarāya was shared between two brothers quarrelling about the division of their inheritance, 32, 14 sq.

Bharata; from his race are the heroes celebrated in the Mahābhārata, 1, 3.

Bhavanānda, see Durgādāsa.

Bhimasena, the Pāṇḍu prince in the Mahābhārata, with whom Rāmachandra is compared on account of his strength, 33, 6.

Majamudāra see Durgādāsa.

Madhu, a son of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa, 5, 8.

Malla, see Lāharimalla.

Maheṣa (25, 16), or Maheṣvara (26, 4), names of Īiva; see Īiva.

Mānasimha, a Delhian general, who with the aid of the majmuat-dār Bhavanānda subdued king Pratāpāditya (13, 11—17); is called only Simha, 16, 1.

Māmudagajanavī, i. e. Mahmūd of Ghazna, 6, 19. See the Preface p. XVIII.

Murāda = مراد, a messenger, who summoned the majmuat-dār Bhavanānda before the governor of Jāmhāgīra, 18, 15.

Yaçoharajit, see Kachu.

Yudhishṭhira, the model of a good king, 26, 19; his sacrifice mentioned as a specimen of a splendid and liberal one, 42, 8.

Raghu, the great grandfather of Rāma, the hero. With him Raghurāma is compared, 58, 12.

Raghurāma, the son of Rāmajivana, a man of an excellent character, and skilled in the use of weapons (52, 10 sq.); assisted Jāfarkhān in a war, (in which he killed Ali Mahmud, the son of Ghulām Mahmud), and obtained as reward for this service the deliverance of his father, who had been taken prisoner by Jāfarkhān (52, 16 — 55, 17). Having obtained the throne of his father, he governed exemplarily (58, 12 sq.); but for almost eleven years from the prison, in which Jāfarkhān kept him confined at Murshedabad (58, 16 — 59, 1). His government having lasted 13 years, he died in the Çaka year 1650 = A. D. 1728 (59, 6). He is mentioned also in Hamilton's Description of Hindostan I. 144.

Rāghava, the third son and successor of Gopāla (23, 1. 3); built palaces at Rūi and Mādurna (23, 7. 24, 5); dug a large pond (24, 8 sq.); erected a phallus of Çiva (24, 20); and at Navadvīpa a statue of Gaṇeṣa (26, 4); while death prevented him from achieving the erection of another phallus of Çiva at Navadvīpa (26, 4). Having obtained great favors from the Sultan of Delhi (25, 20 sq.), he died after a government of 51 years (26, 5).

Rāghaveçvara, the name given by Rudrarāya, in honor of his father Rāghava, to a Çivalinga, the temple of which having been commenced by the latter at Navadvīpa, was finished by Rudrarāya 26, 11.

Rājadhīra, the nephew of Jayasīṃha Deva, and a general of cavalry in the army of Azīm us-shān (49, 3); fell into a quarrel with Rāmakṛishṇa, which, however, was composed by Azīm us-shān, 49, 5 sq.

Rādhāvallabha, a messenger of the governor of Jāmhāgīra to Rāmajīvana, 44, 12.

Rāma 1. the hero, 10, 8. 40, 9. — 2. The posthumous son of Kāçīnātha, and adoptive son and successor of Harikṛishṇa Samuddhāra (10, 5 sq.); got the name Rāma Samuddhāra on account of his having been adopted by the latter (10, 18); and ruled for 36 years (10, 16).

Rāmakṛishṇa, the son of Rudrarāya by his younger wife (33, 5); was after his brother Rāmajīvana's dethronement made king by the governor of Jāmhāgīra (45, 1); secretly entertained the son of Kṛishṇarāma, king of Burdwan, who was overthrown by Çobhāsīṃha (45, 13); was on good terms with Azīm us-shān, the grandson of Aurengzeb (48, 6 — 49, 2); his contest with Rājadhīra (49, 2 sq.); lives on good terms with the English (50, 9); overcomes the king of Jessore (50, 14 sq.); but is taken prisoner by Jāfar-khān, governor of Jāmbhāgīra, and dies in the prison of smallpox (51, 2—11), after a government of 11 years (51, c).

Rāmachandra 1. the hero; to him the whole work is dedicated, 1, 1. — 2. the successor of Viçvanātha (7, 1a), who ruled for 23 years. — 3. The eldest son of Rudrarāya by his elder wife (33, 4); was eminent for his excessive strength of which various anecdotes are related (33, 6 — 34, 4; 34, 4 — 35, 9; 35, 9 — 36, 15; 36, 16 — 38, 7; 38 7—21). On account of his want of erudition and devoutness (38, 21 sq.) he was by his father excluded from succession in favor of his younger brother Rāmajīvana (40, 6 sq.). But Rāmajīvana refusing to provide for his brother as the latter demanded, he having addressed himself to the governor of Jāmbhāgīra, obtained a share in the realm of his father (42, 8 — 44, 3). Yet soon he was taken prisoner by his brother and kept confined (44, 7. 8).

Rāmajīvana, the second son of Rudrarāya by his elder wife (33, 4). His relation to his brother Rāmachandra see under the latter's name. He was dethroned by the governor of Jāmbhāgīra in favor of his younger brother Rāmākṛiṣṇa (44, 10 — 45, 4); but reinstated by Jāfarkhān after the death of Rāmākṛiṣṇa (51, 12 sq.). Then he was by the same taken prisoner again, but delivered through his son Raghurāma (52, 14 — 55, 17). Having magnificently celebrated the birth of his grandson Kṛiṣṇachandra, he died after a reign of 10 years (55, 17 — 58, 11).

Rāmeçvara, the second son of Gopāla, who was, as well as his eldest brother, excluded from succession in favor of their youngest brother, Rāghava, 23, 1. 3.

Rudrarāya, the eldest son of Rāghava and his successor (26, 10); finished the temple of a Çivalinga commenced by his father at Navadvīpa (26, 10); obtained many favors from the Sultan of Delhi (26, 12 sq.); changed the names of Rēui and Mādurna to Kṛiṣṇanagara and Çrinagara (26, 20 sq.); contest of his servants with a Mohammedan officer (27, 3 sq.);

dug a tank (27, 10); was summoned by the governor of Jâṃhâgîra, but bribing the messengers did not appear (27, 13 sq.); anecdote related of him, how he obtained a honorifical leave to return home (28, 8 — 29, 18); another anecdote (29, 18 30, 18); by a Mohammedan architect he had erected several magnificent palaces at Krishṇanagara (30, 13 sq.); and a causeway from there to Çāntipura (31, 4); favors bestowed upon him by the governor of Jâṃhâgîra (31, 9 sq.); anecdotes showing his scrupulousness in observing the duties of a Brahman (31, 12 — 32, 1; 32, 1—14); pleasing anecdote showing his wit (32, 14 — 33, 3); excluded his son Râmachandra from the succession (38, 21 sq.); died after having made himself all preparations for his funeral, while taking a bath in the Bhâgîrathî, after a reign of 11 years (40, 19).

Lakshmi, see Govinda.

Lâharimalla, a general of Jâfarkhân, who overcame Udaya, king of Râjasâi, with the aid of Raghurâma (52, 20 — 55, 6); is called only Malla: 53, 1. 54, 8. 10.

Vaḍasâheba 50, 10 = Mr. Ward? I could not find any particulars about him. — Sâheba is the Arabic - Persian صاحب. In the Bengâlî biography of Krishṇachandra the same man is mentioned as the Governor General (râja Vaḍa sâheb) contemporary to Krishṇach. himself toward the end of his reign, and friendly to him. There probably Warren Hastings is to be understood (1772 — 85), and the mention which is made of him in our passage may be a mistake.

Vaṭu } sons of Bhaṭṭanârâyana, 5, 8. See also Âdivarâha.
Vâma }

Vâlmîki, the author of the Râmâyana, 1, 2.

Vika, a son of Bhaṭṭanârâyana, 5, 8.

Viçvanâtha 1. The eldest son of Kâma, who obtained the sway over the undivided realm of his father by the assistance of Sultan Mahmud of Ghazna (! sic), to whom he agreed to pay tribute (6, 17 sq.) (see the Preface p. XVIII.) Through the favor of the same he obtained Kâmkadi and yet other countries (7, 9); and reigned for 31 years (7, 11);

- his successors remain subject to tribute (7, 11). — 2. The second son of Rāghava, 26, 9.
- Viçvambhara, the son and successor of Kandarpa, ruled for 28 years 6, 3.
- Vrihaspati, the teacher of the gods, here the model of eloquence 48, 18.
- Vedagarbha, a Brahman and one of the four companions of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa 2, 8.
- Çiva; the worship of his phallus was favored by Rāghava (24, 20. 26, 4), and his son Rudrarāya (26, 10 sq.).
- Çivarāmabhāgyavat, an incapable architect of Rāghava 24, 11.
- Çobhāsimha, king of Chetuyā, overcame Kṛishṇarāma, king of Burdwan, but was murdered by the latter's daughter, whom he kept as his mistress (45, 4 — 46, 21); is called only Simha 46, 3.
- Çrikrishṇa, the eldest son of the majmuat-dār Bhavānanda, and father of Gopīramaṇa, 18, 17. 21, 20. Being not content with the intention of his father to divide his realm among his three sons, he repaired to the Sultan of Delhi, from whom he obtained the government over Khoshadaha and Ukhada, 21, 19 sq. He died childless 22, 19.
- Çrijagadrāma, the son of Kṛishṇarāma; having been saved from Çobhāsimha, was secretly entertained by Rāmakrishṇa near Māṭiyari 45, 13.
- Çriharsha, one of the four Brahmans, who were with Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa invited from Kānyakubja by king Âdisūtra, 2, 8.
- Shashṭhidāsa, the son and successor of Kamsāri, ruled for 29 years, 7, 19.
- Samuddhāra, see Harikrishṇa and Rāma.
- Sayephakhām (not Sây., as through a missprint has been written in the text), the Mohammedan king of Sātasaikā and friend to Rāghava, 23, 11. Perhaps سیف خان or صایب خان?
- Sâristhakhām, governor of Jāmbhâgîra, 27, 16. — سرشته خان?

- Simha, see Mānasimha, Çobhāsimha and Hemmatasimha.
- Subuddhi, 1. the son and successor of Viçvanātha, ruled for 25 years, 7, 14. — 2. The fourth son of Rāma Samuddhāra (10, 16), who having obtained a part of the realm of his father (12, 4), resided at Pāṭikāvāḍi (12, 7).
- Surapati, i. e. Indra, 26, 6.
- Sūryavaṃṣa, the race of the sun, the dynasty of which Rāma, the hero, was a member, 1, 2.
- Soma, a son of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa, 5, 9.
- Harikṛishṇa Samuddhāra, 10, 2 sq. He hospitably received the wife of Kāçinātha, who had been vanquished and killed by the Sultan Akbar of Delhi, and having adopted his posthumous son, transmitted to the latter his own realm, so that the dynasty of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa ruled for some time over the realm of Har. Sam., not over its own inherited kingdom, until the majmuat-dār Bhavānanda was reinstated in the latter (17, 12. See Vāgoyāna in Index II). — Is Samuddhāra perhaps a title? The Bengālī biography of Kṛishṇachandra writes Samādvāra, and calls him Viçvanātha.
- Harinārāyaṇa, a kântūgō at the court of Jāṃhāgīra, who fell into a contest with Rudrarāya, 29, 18 sq.
- Harivallabha, the second son of Rāma Samuddhāra (10, 15), who got a share of the realm of his father (12, 4); resided at Phatepura, 12, 6.
- Harihara, the son and successor of Halāyudha, reigned for 15 years, 5, 20. 21.
- Halāyudha, the son and successor of Nipu, reigned for 15 years, 5, 19. 20.
- Hemmatasimha, the younger brother and successor of Çobhāsimha (46, 21); waged war against Rāmakṛishṇa, but was vanquished by the latter (47, 2 sq.); and expelled from his realm by Azīm us-shān (47, 6 — 48, 4). He is called only Simha 48, 1. 2. 3.

INDEX II.

Geographical names.

Books made use of:

R. Ritter's Erdkunde, 2^d ed. Vol. 4—6. Berl. 1834—36.

Wahl. Wahl's Erdbeschreibung von Ostindien, forming V. 4 of Büsching's Erdbeschreibung. Hamburg 1807.

Briggs. The index of geographical names at the end of the fourth volume of Briggs' translation of Ferishta's history of the rise of the Mohammedan power in India.

W. Wilson's Sanskrit dictionary, 2^d ed.

H. Haughton's Bengali and Sanskrit dictionary.

Ham. A Geographical, Statistical, and Historical Description of Hindostan and the Adjacent Countries. By Walter Hamilton. London 1820.

The maps used were those published under the superintendence of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, London 1831—35.

Anga, Bengal proper including Bhagalpore (H.) 25, 1. 41, 2. 56, 15.

Ânduliyâ, a village (grâma) in Vâgoyâna, 8, 17.

Indraprastha, the Sanskrit name for Delhi; is mentioned very frequently throughout the whole book, the Sultans of Delhi appearing since Viçvanâtha as the paramount lords of the descendants of Bhaṭṭanârâyaṇa and many of the other little Râjas of Bengal.

Ukhada, a country, the government over which the Sultan of Delhi conferred upon Çrîkrishṇa, 22, 11.

- Kachvî-forest; there a relation of Pratâpâditya, king of Jessore, the parents of whom had been persecuted and murdered by the latter, was brought up, and got from it the name of „Prince Kachu“, 13, 1 sq. — kachvî means the esculent Arum root.
- Kalikâtâ, i. e. Calcutta, mentioned as the residence of the English (dakshinâtyamlechhâh) 50, 10.
- Kalinga, the name of a country, 56, 15. The name of K. is in the Purâṇas applied to several places, but it especially signifies a district on the Coromandel coast, extending from below Cuttack to the vicinity of Madras (H.). See also R. IV. 1162. VI. 432.
- Kâṃkadî, a country which, through the favor of the Sultan of Delhi, Viçvanâtha obtained, in addition to the realm of his father 7, 9. — D. writes Kâkadî, but the orthography with the ardhachandra is that of B. and of the Bengâlî biography of Kṛishṇachandra. The latter calls Kâṃkadî (with î) a grâma (1, 1), and makes it the residence of Kâçinâtha.
- Kâñchi, one of the seven sacred cities of the Hindus (H.), 25, 1. 41, 2. 56, 15.
- Kâṭuyâṃ, a village (grâma) near Palâçi, 47, 8. Probably Cutwa, the Sanskrit name for which is given by Ham. I. 157 as Kangtoya.
- Kânyakubja, the modern Canouge. Five Brahmans were invited from there by king Âdisûra, to perform an expiatory sacrifice for him, 2, 6 sq.
- Kâçi, the commun name for Benares, 25, 1. 41, 2. 56, 15.
- Kudâlagâchhi, the residence of prince Jagadiça, 12, 7; the dwelling-place of Âchârya, 33, 8. In the latter place it is in both Mss. spelled Kuḍâligâchhi.
- Kṛishṇanagara, formerly Rēui q. v. Rudrarâya having given it this name, had erected there by a Mohammedan architect a palace (30, 15); and built a causeway from there to Çântipura (31, 5). From this time it seems to have been the residence of the kings of Navadvîpa, as it is expressly said of Rudrarâya (39, 14), and Râmakṛishṇa (50, 6). — It - is the city on the river Jellinghy, Eastward from Nuddea, usually written on the maps Kishenagur.

- Keçaragrâma, the residence of king Nipu, who built there a palace, 5, 16; and the descendants of whom remained in the possession of this place, 5, 17.
- Kailâsa, the residence of the gods, a mountain in the Himâlaya range, 24, 19.
- Khâdî, a country, the government over which Rudrarâya obtained from the Sultan of Delhi, 26, 13.
- Koshadaha, a province, the government over which the Sultan of Delhi bestowed upon Çrikrishna, 22, 10.
- Gajanavin, of Ghazna, see Mâmuda in Index I.
- Gauda, i. e. Gaur, the central district of Bengal, 25, 21; is mentioned together with Varddhamâna (Burdwan), 48, 7, 20.
- Châpada, a village (grâma), 13, 19. 16, 15. Perhaps Chuprah in Bahâr, E. Long. 25. 46, N. Lat. 24. 46. Ham. I. 278.
- Chetuyâ, the realm of Çobhâsimha, near Burdwan, 45, 5.
- Jâmhâgîra (8, 10. 27, 13. 15. 44, 19), or better Jâmhâgîranagara (8, 12. 12, 15. 18, 14. 18, and wherever the name of this city occurs save in the passages just mentioned), i. e. the city of the emperor Jehângîr of Delhi (A. D. 1605 — 1627), a name of the famous Bengal city Dakka (Wahl p. 452 and 1116). Though Jâmhâgîranagara be the more correct form, Jâmhâgîra has always been written for the sake of brevity. — This city was the residence of the most powerful Mohammedan governor, the subahdâr of Bengal, the influence of whom upon the little Râjas of Bengal shows itself throughout the whole book; that also the other Mohammedan governors of Bengal, (at least three of them,) were subject to him, is shown by 27, 20. Jâfarkhân removed his residence from Dakka to Murshedabâd (see the passages of Hollwell and Ritter quoted under Jâfarkhân in Index I), by which it becomes clear, why Jâfarkhân appears from 52, 14 to the end as governor of Murshedabâd.

- Juḍī, a country, the government over which was bestowed by the Sultan of Delhi upon Rudrarāya, 26, 13.
- Turakin, of Turkeṣtān; horses from there are of noble race and very strong, 37, 11.
- Tripura, the Sanscrit name for Tipperah, the country between Sylhet (Çrihatta) and Chittagong (Chaturgrāma). A king of Tr. sent a herd of elephants to Akbar of Delhi, 7, 21.
- Dāmodara, the Dummooda river flowing near the city Burdwan, 45, 8.
- Dēuliyā, a village (grāma), where the majmuat-dār Bhavānanda erected a palace, 18, 11.
- Navadvīpa, now Nadiya or Nuddea in Bengal, on the confluence of the Bhāgīrathī and Jellinghy rivers. Rāghava erected there a statue of Gaṇeṣa, and began to build a temple for a Çivalinga, which after his death was finished by his son Rudrarāya, 26, 3—12; Rāmakṛishna for the first time is called „lord of Navadvīpa“, 47, 2. 51, 14; then Rāmakṛishna, 52, 4; while Raghurāma seems again to have resided at Kṛishnanagara, 59, 2.
- Palāçi, a town (nagara), 47, 7; or a village (grāma), 47, 18. It is Plassey, Ham. I. 146.
- Pātikāvāḍi, the residence of prince Subuddhi, the son of Rāma Samuddhāra, 12, 7. It is probably Putcabarry, which I find noted between Plassey and Jellinghy, on the bank of the Jellinghy river. As it is known, ḍ is in Bengālī very commonly pronounced as r (Haughton 49).
- Pārasika, Persian, 11, 13. 15. 13, 3.
- Poyāladaha, a pond rich in fish, which Rāmachandra demanded from his brother, 42, 21.
- Phatepura, the residence of prince Harivallabha, 12, 6. Briggs gives three different towns with the name Futtehpoor (فتیح پور), but according to their situation only one, E. Long. 86. 45, N. Lat. 25, 35, can possibly be our Phatepura. But upon the maps I do not find this town in the place denoted, but somewhat more toward the S. E., about E. Long. 87. 18, N. Lat. 24. 10. It is even to be doubted, whether this Futtehpoor be our Phatepura, for it seems to be too distant from the centre of the realm of the kings of Navadvīpa and Kṛishṇanagara.

Balakhin, of Balkh. This country is mentioned as being famous for its noble and strong horses, 37, 11.

Bhāgīrathī, that branch of the Ganges, on whose confluence with the Jellinghy Navadvīpa is situated. Kācīnātha, when attacked by Akbar, fled toward this river, 8, 15; Rudrarāya feeling himself near his end, repeatedly repaired to its bank (39, 12. 15); and died while taking a bath in it (40, 19).

Bhempura, a village (grāma), where Rāmachandra, the son of Rudrarāya, possessed a hunting-castle, 34, 5. 8.

Magadha, a country on the Sonabhadra river, South-Bahār or Bahār proper (H.), 25, 1. 41, 2. 56, 15.

Māṭiyāri, a town (nagara), in which the majmuat-dār Bhavānanda erected a palace, 18, 10; the dwelling-place of two Brahmins, a quarrel of whom was brought before Rudrarāya, 32, 15; one of these Brahmins, Bhaṭṭa, stayed there, 33, 2; the possession of Māṭiyāri required by Rāmachandra from his brother, 42, 19. D. writes 32, 15 Māṭiyari, while B. has the usual orthography with ī in the second syllable. It would have been better to retain this orthography in the text also in this passage.

Mādurnā, a village (grāma), where Rāghava built a palace, 24, 5; was called Ṣrinagara by Rudrarāya, 27, 2. In the former passage by a missprint is written Mādarnā instead of Mādurnā.

Murasidābāda, i. e. Murshedabad, 46, 17. 47, 6; was the seat of a Mohammedan governor, who was subject to that of Jāmhāgīra, 27, 20; but afterward it became the residence of Jāfarkhān (who had removed thither from Jāmhāgīra), 52, 15. 55, 9. 18. 59, 2.

Mṛijānagara, probably Mirjanagur on the Cobbaduck river in Jessore. The governor of this town was subject to that of Jāmhāgīra 27, 20.

Yaçohāra, the country and town of Jessore. Although it is not expressly said by our author, it is known, that this - country was the realm of Pratâpâditya. After the conquest of the latter by the Delhians, prince Kachu obtained the government over it (17, 10), and the title of „conqueror of Jessore“ (17, 11). A king of Jessore was overcome by Râmakrishna (50, 14 sq.), and his capital plundered (50, 18).

- Râjasâi, the kingdom of Udaya, 52, 17. It is Râjshâhî, the centre of Bengal, between the 24th and 25th degrees N. Lat. In it is situated e. g. Râjmahal. Ham. I. 197.
- Râui, a village (grâma), where Râghava built several palaces and a seraglio, 23, 7; was by Rudrarâya called Krishnanagara, 26, 20.
- Vanga, Bengal or the Eastern part of the modern province (W.), 1, 6. 12, 8. 25, 1. 41, 2. 46, 7. 56, 15. Âdisûra's kingdom was situated there, 1, 6.
- Varddhamâna, i. e. Burdwan (W. and Ham. I. 153.), the country and city. Is was the realm of Krishnarâma, 45, 4 sq.; is mentioned together with Gaur, 48, 7. 20.
- Vallabhapura, a village (grâma), 10, 18; the residence of the majmuat-dâr Bhavânanda, 12, 4. 18, 8.
- Vâgoyâna, a country (pradeça), in which Kâçinâtha was taken prisoner by the army of Akbar (8, 19 sq.); was bestowed upon the majmuat-dâr Bhavânanda as reward for the services shown by him to the Sultan of Delhi (17, 1. 17 sq. 21, 1). It being not said, that this country was taken again from the descendants of the majmuat-dâr, it must be a part of the realm of Krishnachandra. The Bengâli biography of the latter writes Vâguyân, and calls it a parganah (1, 6).
- Vârâṇasî i. e. Benares. The captive Pratâpâditya died there, 17, 5.
- Virakâti, a village (grâma) in Râjshâhî, 52, 19.
- Çântipura, now Santipour, a town to the S. W. of Krishnanagara, on the Hugly. A causeway was built by Rudrarâya from Krishnanagara to this place, 31, 5.
- Çrinagara, formerly Mâdurnâ q. v. The residence of Râmachandra, when he had obtained from the governor of Jâm-hâgîra the permission to hold the government over a part of the realm of his father 44, 2. Probably it is Sirinagur, to the N. E. of Hugly.

Sâtasaiikâ, the realm of the Mohammedan king Saifkhân, who was a friend to Râghava, 23, 11. D. writes Sâtasaiikâ. Sukhasâgara, a village (grâma), toward the North of Calcutta and Chandernagore (R. VI. 1190), on the Bhâgirathi, 39, 12, 13.

Saurâshtra (usually Surâshtra), the modern Surat, 41, 2. Svarnadi, the Ganges (24, 10), properly that of heaven.

Hugali (27, 20. 28, 3. 40, 1. 43, 14), or Hugali (11, 10. 12, 16. 43, 17 etc., so usually), or Hugali (11, 2 and D. 43, 14), Hugly, the well known city in Bengal; was the seat of a Mohammedan governor (12, 16), who, however, was subject to that of Jâmhâgira (27, 20); the residence of a faujdar, (probably a title which belonged to all the governors of Hugly,) 43, 14; the country about Hugly rich in sandal wood, 40, 1.
